A Blooming Beauty.

The passer-by will see in the window of Long's confectionery store a magnificent specimen of hydrangea purpurea in most profuse bloom. There are about thirty-four fully expanded umbels of pale, purplish inflorescence on the plant, which is literally burdened down with its weight of floral display. It has been blooming over three months. Mrs J. D. Tully the proprietress of it, is very enthusiastic and very successful in the culture of flowers.

Royal Oak Hotel.

The old Royal Oak Hotel, Hunter street, has been removed to make room for the new building. It was a tough job but was well done by Mr. A. McCarthy of Allandale, whose card appears in another column of this paper. Last season Mr. McCarthy, had a large number of difficult jobs to do and he did them all with great success. He finds advertising in THE EXAMINER pays him well. Any persons wanting buildings moved, could not employ a trustier nor more capable man than Mr. McCarthy.

Durham Field Battery.

This battery muster at the Kingston camp with 4 guns, 55 officers, non-commissioned officers and men—and 31 horses. The following are among the officers Major McLean, capt. Sanderson, (Peterborough), etc. When the battery arrived in camp at ten o'clock at night on Tuesday, they found their tents pitched for them. The horses of this battery are the subject of a good deal of praise in the camp on account of their fine appearance. The battery has one or two more than the full complement of men. The soldiers of the Peterborough wing are, as the Whig puts it, "blood and fire soldiers and make the camp ring with Salvation (Saved?) army melodies.

Do not fail to visit "China Hall," the palace store of Peterborough. 26-tf

The Crops.

In a recent issue we gave a resume of the opinions of the different reeves of the municipalities in reference to the state and prospects of the crops. It will be remembered that nearly all the opinions were qualified with a promise as to speedy rain. The rain came, and there is a great change. A gentleman in town, well qualified to form a reliable opinion, after a journey embracing the entire county, gives a more encouraging report. The fall wheat shows some excellent fields, while others which it is true are largely represented, though comparatively thin on the ground, will yield an excellent quality of grain, which will be some extent, compensate for small productiveness. The same general remark applies to the barley crop. Spring crop, a generally have taken a much more encouraging aspect. Hay will also considerably improve under the stimulus of the rain, though the grass was, at the time of the rain, a little too near maturing to profit as much as cereal crops. It is remarkable how a few hours' rain can make such vast changes in the financial prospects of the farmers vernal investments.

A Matrimonial Serenade.

On Thursday evening the City Band honored Mr. A. D. Fancher with a serenade in celebration of that young gentleman's assumption of Benedictine bonds. The band's treasury is considerably richer by Mr. Fancher's generous recognition of the compliment paid him.

A Graceful Custom.

A very pretty custom, which during the flowery season might be appropriately imitated by Peterborough churches, prevails in the Unitarian church, Jarvis street, Toronto. A committee of young ladies every Sunday decorates the pulpit and its attachments profusely with flowers, contributed by members of the congregation who have gardens or gathered in the woods. Last Sunday the scent of ripe clover filled the auditorium.

The Steamer Fairy.

As will be seen by advertisement, the steamer Fairy runs regular trips on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, on the arrival of the noon train at Lakefield, to all points on the back lakes, returning at 7 p.m. Camping parties will be landed at any point, and pic-nic parties will be taken at reduced rates. Parties wishing the boat for any other day may secure it by applying a day or two in advance of the day on which it is required.

Peterborough's Greatest Attraction

with the electric light is the "Golden Lion" on George street, where every department is filled to the ceiling with choice new season-onable goods. In Millinery—everything new and attractive. In Dress and Mantle Making—the finest fabrics to choose from, and all orders executed on shortest notice and in most elegant styles. In Tailoring—a most complete stock of Scotch Tweeds, Fine Worsteds, &c., to select from, a competent cutter and a good fit guaranteed. Other departments show specialities too numerous to mention which tend to make Fair, Van-Every & Co., the "Grand centre of attraction" in Peterborough.—Our Contemporary, Port Hope Times. 27-tf

A Splendid Chance.

It will be seen by an advertisement in another column that Mr. D. W Dumble offers for sale a number of Building Lots in various parts of the town on ten years credit. No money down, interest only to be paid for first five years, and thereafter yearly instalments with the right to pay at any time as may suit the convenience of the purchaser. This offer enables a poor man to use his money in erecting a building, and so he gets rid of rent, and secures a home for himself. Building will be cheap this year and no doubt many will take advantage of this very liberal offer. Besides lots in town, Mr. Dumble offers a number of lots in Ashburnham, and several park lots on the same terms. Call at his office and see plans, &c.

Organ Recital.

The organ recital given by Mr. C. W. Ewing, organist and choir master of St. John's Church, on Wednesday night, was a marked musical success. There was a good attendance of rather critical auditors, but the programme was given with such general excellence as to disarm criticism. The ease, freedom, compass and sympathetic manipulation that marks Mr. Ewing's playing were brought out in a decided manner. The assistance of Miss Clara Cluxton and Mr. E. M. Porteous was highly appreciated. Miss Cluxton, always a favorite, sang a couple of selections—and difficult ones, too, from Handel and Bach—in a manner that surprised even those whose experience leads them to expect much from her. Her voice is developing into a rich soprano, and every public appearance adds to its sweetness, flexibility and sympathy. Mr. Porteous, as usual, acquitted himself excellently well. He never showed to better advantage nor justified his deserved popularity so fully as on Wednesday night. Herr Jacobsen's appearance was a revelation to many of the musical capability of the violin. His bowing is excellent, and his tone is sweet and even. Public appreciation of his playing was shown by his being twice recalled. Altogether Mr. Ewing is to be congratulated on the success of his third organ recital, a consequence largely due to his high abilities as an organist, his love of music, and the success that attends both his teaching and his faculty of exciting the musical enthusiasm of his pupils.

Bicycle Versus Baby.

On Friday last a baby bicyclist, that is to say a very callow apprentice to the dizzy business, about as capable of managing his machine as the infantile subject of his subsequent adventure, met with a thrilling experience. He was returning home from the cemetery on Decoration Day, and had set out with the evident intention, judging from the airs he assumed, of astonishing the natives by his dexterity in managing his caoutchouc-shod charger. On coming down the incline leading from the cemetery, the attraction of gravitation rather got the start of him and his efforts to maintain his equilibrium, under the wobbling gait his machine assumed, caused him to steer wildly, endangering not only his own trembling bones but also those of every foot-passenger within a distance of twelve feet parallel to the direction in which he wished to go. Suddenly something happened; the bicyclist took a header over the handles of his wheel and landed, head foremost of course, plump into the middle of a baby cab. The youngster fancying that the sudden and abnormal abdominal pressure was a thunderstroke of some new form of cholic, roared lustily, his mother shrieked in concert, and the spectators, after the baby's yells told it was not fatally hurt, heartily enjoyed the exchange of recriminations between the outraged mother and the headlong bicyclist. The former declared that "no person of no sense would bring them nasty things among folks"; while the young man volubly cursed the custom that allowed "those d—d baby carts" to cumber the streets and wished the present one in the bottom of the lake. Nobody was hurt except in feeling, and the wheelman was affected so badly that he went home by the way of the Locks bridge, and has'nt mounted his machine since.

DOMINION DAY SPORTS.

Seventeenth Celebration of Canada's Christening.

High Holiday in Town—The Lacrosse Match—The Sports and Games—The Evening's Entertainment—Pleasure-Seeking Elsewhere—Minor Events.

Almost everybody observed last Tuesday as a holiday, and various were the means available for quenching the thirst for pleasure. In a private way, fishing, boating driving, pic-nicing and (with a creditably small number) "getting over the bay," were indulged in. A large number left on both railway lines to see Toronto's half-century "blow-out" and Wallace's Point and Idyl Wild, absorbed a good share of our citizens. In the town the programme of sports provided by the committee of the clubs was excellent, and one that was carried out more fully and more completely, than, perhaps, any other previous programme of the kind ever presented in town.

In the Morning

the lacrosse match between the home team and a "first-class" team, as the secretary called them, of the Toronto's, the lacrosse champions of the world, was the great attraction. In spite of the blazing heat of the day, the grounds were crowded by spectators, largely composed of ladies. At about a quarter to eleven.

THE TEAMS

were inspected by the referee, and went into the field as below:

PETERBOROUGH.		TORONTO.
J. Giroux	Goal	T. Mills
P. Myles	Point	A. Martin
M. Tierney	Cover Point	W. Robinson
J. Howden	Defence Field	C. Henderson
M. Halpin	do	T. Henderson
W. J. Scott	do	Corp. McDonald
J. Sheehey	Centre Field	S. Strathers
A. Yelland	Home Field	P. Jarvis
R. Kelly	do	J. Irvine
C. Rutherford	do	F. W. Hayes
W. Rudkins	Second Home	F. Dixon
G. Giroux	First Home	J. Maharg
Jas. Coughlin	Field Captain	W. Donaldson
John Corkery	Umpire	C. Smith

Referee—T. J. Crean, Montreal.

The match was a time one, the team taking the most goals in the two hours winning the match.

THE FIRST GAME—TORONTO.

No time was lost in getting at work. As invariably the case, Sheehey got the ball; on the face; it soon travelled to the home goal; Tierney with one of his noted long throws, transferred the danger to the Toronto flags. Our space will not admit of details, but it must be stated that never was finer lacrosse seen on any field. The good throwing of Tierney, and the clever dodging and cool drop shots of Sheehey, the clever catching of Howden, the fine brilliant play of Kelly, Scott, Rudkins, Rutherford, Halpin, and the work done at point by Myles, put the Toronto flags frequently in danger, but their fine defence prolonged the game. J. Giroux had hot work of it too, in defending his flags, but he did it well, as it was only after 23 minutes of hard and beautiful play, that Irvine, of the Toronto's, put the ball through and scored the first game.

THE SECOND GAME—TORONTO.

After a short rest, the teams were at it again. Toronto's goal was first attacked, but the ball was soon sent back to the home flags, and a dangerous drop was neatly stopped by Joe Giroux, and the ball sent a-field where Howden and Kelly showed some fine play, in getting the ball, and cutting out work for Toronto's defence. But the ball got back towards the home flags, and Hayes put it through for second game.—Time 4 minutes.

THIRD GAME—PETERBOROUGH.

This monotony rather put our boys on their mettle, and they went in to win; this time the play was a lively spurt of lacrosse. After one or two close calls on the enemy's flags, Rutherford dropped the rubber to G. Giroux who put it through, thus winning the first game for Peterborough, and the third of the series, in a little less than three minutes.

FOURTH GAME—PETERBOROUGH.

This result also put the Toronto's more on their mettle, and they showed rather more defence and less home work than before. This game lasted fourteen minutes, and was a red-hot bit of lacrosse. There was a good deal of see-saw in it to make it interesting, the ball threatening each goal in rapid succession. In this game Yelland and Kelly made splendid runs across the field, and beautiful drop shots, which, however, were well stopped. Myles did some fine checking, Tierney some grand throwing, and Rutherford some splendid dodging. After considerable more lively play the ball got behind Toronto's flags, where Sheehy got it and made a tidy drop shot in front of the goal, but it got behind again, and again Jimmy put in a fine drop, which was taken advantage of by Rutherford, who tipped the ball to Rudkins, who put it through—time 14 minutes.

THE FINALE.

There were yet a few minutes left, and play was continued with varying success for eight minutes, when "time" was called and the play ended, the result a draw with the prospective advantage to Peterborough, for the ball was to be faced close to the Toronto flags, and with the splendid form the home team was showing the result would have been dangerous, if not decisive.

The Torontos was a first-class team, and great credit is due the home club for the strong stand taken—making an even thing with a team containing "Pluck" Martin, Struthers and Dixon of the championship twelve.

AT WALLACE'S POINT.

The steamer Golden-Eye was laden with passengers at every one of her three trips of the Fire Brigade excursion to Wallace's Point. A delightful day was spent at the Point, and everybody voted Fancher's summer hotel a charming summer resort. The excursion was patronized by about 600, and the last of the party arrived home about 1.30 a.m. A big heap is added to the hose reel iund. The excursions were a great success, and Commodore Calcutt's generosity is worthy of all praise and imitation.

AT IDYL WILD.

About one hundred and fifty from town went down by train to Idyl Wild, where Commodore Calcutt made it pleasant for everybody. There was no competition for the three splendid cups offered by the Commodore. The water was too rough for the aquatic events. In the afternoon the Lacrosse Club arrived to play for the cup, but found no opponents. Capt. Coughlin drew his team up in line and addressing the public assembled, exclaimed dramatically, "ecce pueri —behold the boys," and stated that his team was willing to play for the cup with either Norwood, Hastings or Cobourg, or a team of picked men selected from these clubs. There was no response, and the Peterboroughs claimed the first heat in the play for the cup—to be won best two out of three times. The home club suggests, in view of the poor grounds at Idyl Wild, that the other two heats be played in Peterborough, and the club will run two or three excursions to Idyl Wild to compensate the Commodore for taking the attraction of the match away. The Peterborough party on the return trip were delayed an hour and a half at Keene station by a late train, but the jolliest hour of the day was put in here. Miss Minnie Poulittet, plays the mouth organ wonderfully well, and she furnished good music for jigs, reels, clogs, etc., on the station platform; every one enjoyed the treat so much that they were sorry when the train arrived. The following day the oral organiste was presented with a handsome brooch.

AT NORWOOD.

A lacrosse match was played here between the Independents, of Peterborough, and the Tuscarora's, of Norwood. The home juniors won the match by a score of 3 games to 1.

AT LINDSAY.

The Peterborough base ball club went to Lindsay, and "got pounded all to pieces"—being defeated by a score of 36 runs, a score of 42 to 6. One local club can't laugh at the other now.

The Afternoon

was devoted to the athletic sports in the Drill Shed grounds, where a fairly good number had assembled to witness the carrying out of one of the best programmes of the kind ever presented in Peterborough.

The first on the list was

Hop Step and Jump—1st W. H. Doyenas, 35 ft., 3 in; 2nd W. Dean.

100 Yards Race—Eleven entries, 1st Paul Jarvis (Toronto); 2nd P. E. S. Cooper.

Standing Long Jump—1st S. Wood, 9 ft., 3 in; 2nd W. Dean.

Quarter Mile Race (Boys)—1st — Kennedy; 2nd W. Revell.

One Mile Race—For this mostly contested race there were four entries, C. L. Orde, W. Dean, T. G. Kindred and T. Sheppard. Dean led gamely the whole course, followed by Kindred, the others coming closely after, so that the four contestants were pretty well bunched at the finish, where Dean was first, Kindred second.—Time 6.16.

Quarter Mile Race—1st J. Morris, (Ontario Bank); 2nd P. E. S. Cooper, (Bank of Toronto).

Sack Race—1st Alex. Miller; 2nd J. Ringer.

Running High Jump—1st S. Wood, 4 ft., 11 in; 2nd A. Rees, 4 ft., 10 in.

Hurdle Race—1st A. Rogers; 2nd J. H. Carnegie.

Press Race—Mr. McClelland one of the committee interpolated a race for the reporters of the local press. The prize a year's subscription to the Millbrook Messenger, was won by Mr. A. P. Choate representative of the Times.

Throwing Cricket Ball—1st Geo. Fitzgerald, 92 yds., 6 in; 2nd H. Geale, 86 yds., 1½ ft.

Tug of War—This was the grand finale and was a sharp struggle, best two out of three, between teams selected from the clubs and members of the band as follows: The clubs—Messrs. A. Rogers, Geo. Fitzgerald, R. B. Rogers, Miles Hamilton, J. H. Carnegie, W. Dean M. Dennistoun, G. L. Orde, R. Strickland, F. W. Haultain and G. Scott. Band—Messrs. S. Sharpe, S. Wood, I. York, H. Brault, F. McDonald, F. Freeman, M. Barry, J. Reynolds, J. Garside, G. Mannell and J. Brydon. In the first bout, under the terrible tug of the pullers, the rope parted in the middle and twenty-two athletes went sprawling in opposite directions, making immense fun for the spectators. A new rope was procured and the contest resulted in a victory for the club team.

During the afternoon a quoit match took place between Messrs. D. Galletly and John Rose, Mr. Galletly winning by a score of 41 to 34.

The Evening

brought the promenade concert in the drill shed when there was a very large attendance to listen to the fine programme of selections rendered so excellently by the "City Band." The concert was followed by a grand display of fireworks. The entire arrangements were excellently carried out by the celebration committee especially the athletic sports portion, which went on smoothly, promptly and to general satisfaction. The committee were Messrs. R. B. Rogers, A. Elliott, T Rutherford, J. McClelland, W. H. Budden, E. B. Edwards and P. E. S. Cooper. Mr. A. T. Strickland acted as judge, and G. W. Hatton, A. J. Belcher and R. B. Rogers as starters.

OTONABEE.

To the Editor of the EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—On Thursday last, School Section No. 8, Otonabee, held a social picnic at Idyl Wild and spent a very pleasant day indeed. The weather was all that could be desired. The attendance was large, the arrangements were complete and well carried out, all arrived home in good time and no mishap occurred to mar the pleasure of the day. Through the columns of your widely circulated paper the trustees desire to express their hearty thanks and are requested to convey the thanks of the managing committee as well, to captain (R. W. Carson,) of the Whistle-wing, for his kindness to the pupils. His gentlemanly and obliging conduct to all the passengers, and his able and efficient management of his steamer, while the river contains seventy thousand logs, and we hope Mr. Calcutt will always find the services of captain Carson so sufficiently remunerative in connection with his line of steamers as to warrant him to retain them another year, and the pupils and people of S. S. No. 8, Otonabee may enjoy another trip to Idyl Wild.

From Ed. Pearce, Secretary, Town Trust Commissioner, referring to the maturing of debentures to the amount of $6200 and requesting their removal.—Request complied with.

From R. B. Edwards, stating that the cost of the suit Laplante versus Peterborough to quash a by-law, to close Wells street, was $107.19.—Referred to the Finance committee with power to act.

A number of other communications, petitions and accounts were considered and disposed of.

MECHANIC'S INSTITUTE.

Messrs. Pousssette and W. English appeared before the council asking a grant of $200 to the Mechanic's Institute. Mr. Pousssette was heard and stated that the Institute was twice as important as when the usual annual grant of $100 was started; unless double aid were granted, the directors would be obliged to increase the fees which would close it to a great many citizens.—Referred to Finance Committee.

YELLAND'S SIDING.

Mr. Douglass moved, seconded by Mr. Green, that the petition of Thomas Bradburn and others praying that no further concessions be granted to the Midland Railway, on Bethune street between London and Charlotte streets, be granted.

Mr. Millar said he thought the motion was aimed at preventing Mr. Yelland getting his switch, and he would strongly oppose it.

Mr. Douglass thought the council had had a sufficiently expensive experience with railway by-laws.

The Mayor pointed out the unwisdom of building a stone wall about every half-acre lot in town. The switch was not for the profit of the railway, but for the public.

Mr. Yelland said he had made concession after concession to suit parties who complained, and he was prepared to pay reasonable damages before the siding was put in.

Mr. Millar moved in amendment, seconded by Mr. Rutherford that a by-law to replace by-laws 469 and 470 be read a first time. The amendment was carried on the following division:

YEAS—Messrs. Davidson, Allin, Kelly, Millar, Rutherford, Menzies, Kendry, Hartly and Cox—9.

NAYS—Messrs. Green and Douglass—2.

The by-law received its first reading and the council went into committee of the whole on the second reading Mr. Hartley in the chair.

The by-law, which repealed the clause requiring the G.T.R. to construct the switch and compensate property owners, provided that William Yelland do the same.

The by-law duly passed its second and third readings requiring the appointment of arbitrators to assess the amount of damages to the parties concerned.

LUND'S STORE.

On motion of Mr. Rutherford, seconded by Mr. Douglass, the street inspector was instructed to plank part of the street in front of Mr. Lund's shop.

MR. KINGAN'S CLAIM.

Mr. Rutherford moved, seconded by Mr. Kelly, That whereas the claim of Mr. R. Kingan for damage done to his property on Bethune street by the construction of the "Missing Link," was referred to arbitration and such arbitration has been held and an unanimous award made, it is resolved that this council instruct their clerk to notify J. Hickson, Esq., President of the Midland Railway Company and manager of the Grand Trunk Railway, that if the amount of the award so made is not paid to Mr. Kingan on or before the 31st day of July next, the council will have the rails connecting the "Missing Link" with the Lakefield line, taken up out of the railway and will not permit them to be laid down again.

The Mayor said the award had not been taken up and the Railway company did not yet know whether there was anything to pay or not.

Mr. Kingan was heard. He pointed out that the matter was not one between himself and the railway, but between the town and the railway. The street was where the damage was done, and he thought the town should stand by him and secure him his rights.

The Mayor said that if Mr. Kingan would agree to take $1,000 in settlement of his claim he (the Mayor) would guarantee that he would get it within a week.

Mr. Yelland said that if Mr. Kingan would state what he would take the beginning of a settlement would be arrived at.

The Councillors generally agreed that the proposal to take up the rails was a too violent one.

His Worship said the motion proposed something that, the Council had no power to do, and he ruled the motion out of order.

Mr. Menzies, who strongly opposed the violent nature of the motion, said he raised the point of order, as it would involve an expenditure of money.

Several members—How?

Mr. Menzies—Why, for taking up the rails. (Laughter.)

Mr. Rutherford modified his motion by substituting, after the words "July 31st next," the words "request the Railway Company to take up the rails connecting the Missing Link with the Lakefield line, and will not permit them to be laid down again till arranged."

The motion as modified was put and carried on the following division:

YEAS—Messrs. Davidson, Allin, Kelly, Green, Millar, Yelland, Douglass, Rutherford, Kendry and Hartley.

NAYS—Messrs. Cox and Menzies.

TO THE HOSPITAL.

Mr. Hartley moved, seconded by Mr. Green, that the ladies of the Home be requested to send Wm. Manning to the hospital for sick children, Toronto, and that the Council make such grants from time as the ladies of the Home may deem necessary.

A motion of Mr. Kelly, seconded by Mr. Green, that a three plank walk be laid down on Dowdey street, was referred to the Street and Bridge Committee.

RAILWAY WHISTLING.

Mr. Rutherford moved, seconded by Mr. Douglass, that the Clerk be instructed to get a copy of the Toronto by-law to suppress railway whistling, so that this town may pass the same.—Carried.

STREET SURVEYING.

Mr. Davidson moved, seconded by Mr. Allin, that Messrs. Rogers & Dennison be authorized to survey the continuation of Water street from Sherbrooke to Wolfe street.—Carried.

COURT HOUSE PARK.

Mr. Millar inquired what had been done towards opening the Court House Park.

Mr. Cox said the County Council had re-enacted the resolution referring the matter to a joint committee, and the matter was so referred; and on motion of Mr. Millar, seconded by Mr. Hartley, the standing Joint Committee of the Council was instructed to confer with the Committee of the County Council, with a view of placing the Court House Park and the "Old Burying Ground" at the disposal of the public, under the management of a Park Commission.

MONEY REQUIRED.

The Town Trust Commissioners informed the Council that the amount required for paying interest on debentures and sinking fund was $7,209.

STREET WATERING.

On motion the Council directed that the two street watering carts be continued two weeks longer.

Council adjourned for one month.

A Canine Steed.

An odd looking turn out, consisting of a gentleman drawn by a dog in a literal dog cart, attracted considerable attention on the streets this week. The gentleman is Mr. Rook, watchmaker of Newburg, who has lost the use of his lower limbs and is dependent on a faithful Newfoundland dog for means of getting about. The dog draws his master at the speed of an ordinary horse, from Newburg to the county town, Napanee, and back or wherever his business or inclination calls him. On Monday the dog stood drawn up at the walk on George street like a well-trained horse, while his owner was transacting business at the Bank of Toronto. Mr. Rook is in town visiting friends.

PIERCING PIGS AT MATTHEWS & SON'S PACKING PLACE.

Administering the Cold Steel to the Pulsent Porker—How the Mighty are Converted into Pork—From Pen to Pickle—The Cured Carcase—Scientific Slaughtering, Systematic Slaughtering and Careful Curing.

At Matthews & Son's Packing Establishment, George street, the [illegible] and curing must go on the year round to supply the large and increasing demand for the prime meats prepared there. In the fall and winter the supply of carcases keeps the packing department busy; in the summer, however, the supply fails off and the animal has to be killed. The like every other part of the work is a clean and perfectly equipped establishment, is of the most approved character. Everything is so conveniently arranged that with a full staff of assistants, it is possible to prevent the squealing, struggling pig entering the pen, stuck, scalded, scraped, disembowelled and hanging in the cooling room in the space of one minute. This is the record, but not the practice. As only four pigs can be employed, only eight or ten pigs are killed at once. Then the same staff commence at the head of the lot and begins again to kill what is left after this fashion. The butcher quickly [illegible] at the gate of a pen in which [illegible] are driven. An assistant, armed with a short chain, enters the pen and hooks the chain deftly around the hind leg of the pig. The chain is at once attached to a double hook at the end of a rope operated by a windlass. Another assistant operates the windlass and up rises piggy in the air, and the free side of the double hook is hitched on to a sort of elevated, single track railway suspended from the ceiling. Now, the butcher, advancing, throws his left arm around the body of the pig in the same manner in which a gentleman encircles a lady's waist in the waltz, only with the other arm, the blade is plunged in and the pig is passed on to die, which it does quickly, the blood, with the head hanging downward, escaping with fatal facility. In the meantime another pig is swung up in readiness, the cold steel is administered to him, and then to another, till the eight or ten are killed. When the first pig killed reaches the end of the elevated track his body drops on a sloping platform, which conveys it into a huge heated and kept hot by steam from the adjacent boiler room. Two men then attack the corpse and, with instruments like short handled hoes, scrape off the bristles with dexterous rapidity. Another workman now seizes the pig, floating about in the vat as bald as a billiard ball, inserts the gambrel, a piece of wood used to separate the legs and suspend the carcase by. Another windlass hoists the hog up, and a hook hanging from a single-wheel truck, working on an elevated track, is hooked on to the groove in the centre of the gambrel, and the pig is passed on to the "opener," who, with a few slashes with his knife, performs kari kari on the pig in less than half a minute. After the disembowelling process, the nozzle of a rubber hose, connected with the water works, is inserted in the eviscerated body, and the water, driven by a pressure of fifty pounds to the square inch, washes out all blood, etc., in a twinkling. The carcase then gets a shove and rolls along the elevated track, which has a slight decline, and passes into the cooling room, where there are several elevated double track railways, just the width of the length of the gambrel. The pig is then side tracked on one of these lines. This process, which takes many times goes on till the batch or car-load is hill. On July 1st Mr. Matthews weighed his car-load of hogs at Hastings; on July 2nd they were shipped; on July 3rd they were slaughtered, and on July 4th they were packed and in process of curing.

When the batch is killed the slaughter room is thoroughly cleansed. The solid offal is carted away and buried on the other side of the river near the Locks. The covering of the gutters that pass along the floor is then lifted, the hose turned on and kept playing till the floor, which is caulked with oakum, like a ship's deck, is as

and, as far as cleanliness goes, one could safely eat strawberries and cream off it. So thoroughly is the place cleansed that not a single evidence, save a fresh meat smell, exists of the late scene of slaughter. The most scrupulous cleanliness is observed, and so successful are the means employed that a passer-by could not by any trace of foul odour tell the bustling packing building from a Quaker meeting house.

CUTTING AND CURING.

As before described, the pigs, after killing, are hung in the curing room; they are then again side-tracked into the adjoining refrigerator, where they are subjected to a very low temperature till every trace of animal heat is dissipated and the carcase becomes as cool and solid as in December. The carcasses are then transferred to the cutting room, where the cutting and trimming goes on, each piece, as finished, passing down a chute into the summer curing cellar, where the process of curing is completed. This cellar is kept so cold—not merely cool—that the workmen have to wear winter clothing when at work in it. It will thus be seen that so rapid is the [illegible] and curing process, to speedy [illegible] that summer-killed pork can be, and is, cured just as quick, and as sure to keep sweet, as winter prepared meats.

HOUSE MEANS.

The savings resulting from the trimming of the hides, with the subdivisions, etc., are noted in the manufactures of lard, and kidney suet. During the summer season about half a ton a week is made, but in the winter this amount sometimes trebles or two tons. A new [illegible] machine, recently imported direct from Birmingham, England, has been added to the plant. It is a vast improvement on the kind generally used.

[illegible] satisfy a lot of those Heavy Corpulent-ness, our Patients and Restorers as Tormentors, for quickly make them rapidly.

THE HAMLET OF HAVELOCK.

Begotten and Boomed by the C. P. R.

How are perhaps aware that quite a village has sprung up about twenty-four miles east of the town, at a place on the line of the [illegible] Railway, which some few months since [illegible] the name of Havelock. The [illegible] in the village. Mr. Alexander [illegible] work was completed, and a [illegible] made when all angles that the [illegible] worked like a charm. On Saturday [illegible] was one of the busiest in the [illegible] appeared to have taken up their [illegible] in fact, they thronged the [illegible] great part of the day. Afterfor [illegible] well under way, it will be finished [illegible] also completed, and [illegible] of the [illegible] Mr. Alexander [illegible] to the place are the most [illegible] (second-class), well [illegible] way, and so far advanced that a telegraph operator is at work in it, a large boarding house to be finished [illegible] a hotel, a bank, the [illegible] in Peterborough, the [illegible] the [illegible] fitting the [illegible] a large [illegible] [illegible] material for unlimited fun on pay-days, seven or eight boarding tents, stables for horses, and two or three farm houses in the suburbs.

THE PRESENT POPULATION,

counting regular and transient residents, is about 200; pretty fair for a village less than two months old. This village, which was begotten and has been boomed by the building of the O. & Q. Railway, promises to be a place of considerable importance. Since Birt broke the ice the price of village lots has jumped up. Quarter-acre lots are now selling at $90, at which figure several Peterborough speculators have invested. Let us all hope that Havelock may have luck and increase and flourish.

WEATHER NOTES.

June followed much in the same strain as May, with dry hot, weather for a number of days. During the month the thermometer kept rattling up about the nineties; on Sunday the 22nd at 3 o'clock p. m. it rose to 95° in the shade, being the hotest day so far, in the season. The lowest temperature was on the morning of the 13th and four succeeding days being only 45 deg. On the morning of the 15th, 16th, 17th we had white frost. The mean temperature for the month at sunrise and sunset was 65° Four days we had thunder storms, the severest of which was on the afternoon of the 19th, over one inch of water falling, and considerable hail. Rain fell on eight days to the depth of one inch and 84-100 of an inch. However, looking back on the month of June, farmers ought to feel thankful for the many showers received, thereby greatly improving the appearance of all kinds of crops.

On Thursday evening last a little before sun-down two large balls of fire apparently falling, appeared in the west, and when at an altitude of 45° they suddenly burst, scattering their glittering pieces in all directions. Some time after the explosion, two reports were heard which reverberated through heaven's mighty vault, dying away in the distance. All who witnessed the phenomenon are satisfied the reports were caused by the bursting of the ball.

The great results which have attended the regular use of Quinine Wine, by people of delicate constitution and those affected with a general prostration of the system, speak more than all the words that we can say in its behalf. This article is a true medicine and a life giving principle—a perfect renovator of the whole system—invigorating at the same time both body and mind. Its medical properties are a febrifuge tonic and anti-periodic. Small doses, frequently repeated, strengthen the pulse create an appetite, enable you to obtain refreshing sleep, and to know that every fiber and tissue of your system is being braced and renovated. In the use of Wine prepared by Northrop & Lyman, Toronto, we have the exact tonic required and to persons of weak and nervous constitutions we would say never be without a bottle in the house. It is sold by all druggists.

A sad accident occurred at Thorndury on Thursday by which a Miss Alexander, of that place, lost her life. It appears that three young women were amusing themselves on a raft at the mouth of Indian River, when a strong wind blew them into the lake, where the raft parted, by which Miss Alexander was thrown into the water and drowned. The others were nobly rescued from their perilous position by a man named Gage. The body was recovered.

The wife and little daughter of Mr. Dawson, druggist, of Montreal, had a very narrow escape in crossing a field at Ste. Rose from being killed by grape shot fired by a farmer at a dog that was chasing a cow owned by him. Both the lady and child received several wounds in their lower extremities. Some bushes they were passing at the time the shot was fired hid Mrs. Dawson and her daughter from the farmer, who expressed deep regret for the accident and had a physician immediately summoned, who pronounced that there was no danger to be apprehended.

The Montreal Recorder, who lately threatened the representatives of the press from the bench with the pains and penalties of the law, both in his own and a higher court, for commenting freely on some very eccentric judgments he had recorded, does not seem to have intimidated the fourth estate in the least, for he is being castigated more severely than ever, for discharging a butcher on a fine of twenty cents for selling tuberculous meat. His reasons for treating the matter so lightly are vigorously called in question by the press as well as at the Board of Health by intelligent aldermen.

Sherin on Saturday morning last after an illness which confined him to his bed for only a week. Deceased had been a resedent of Emily the greater portion of his life, having moved into Omemee about a year ago. Isaac Little, a brakeman employed in the Midland Railway yard here, had a narrow escape from being cut to pieces early on Monday morning. It appears as Little was putting on the break on a lumber train which was in motion, the brake broke and threw Little on the ties. He was dragged along a distance of about twenty cars, when he managed to grasp hold of the brake beam, on which he climbed up. His right arm and leg were severely lacerated, and his shirt sleeve torn in ribbons. On looking round he saw the train he was on was about running into another timber train that was standing in the yard, and after considerable effort he managed to call the engineer's attention to the danger. Fortunately the train was stopped in time to prevent a collision and probably loss of life. Little thinks he had just about as close a call as he wants to experience.

Mrs. O'Heara, River Street, Toronto, uses Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil for her cows for Cracked and Sore Teats; she thinks there is nothing like it. She also used it when her horses had the Epizootic with the best results. Do not be persuaded to take any other Oil in place of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil.

If you can get that queer-looking duck to talk he may give you a wrinkle, "said a policeman to a reporter, pointing out a man whom the reporter had often seen loitering around the newspaper offices as the last of the reporters, editors and compositors bend their steps homeward. His age was probably about 45, although the weather-beaten look of his face made him seem older than he really was. His slight frame was bent forward at the shoulders, and his eyes were closely scanning the pavement as he walked slowly along.

"I don't want no competitors in my biz," he said, "tho' 'tain't every one who'd have the perseverance or the gifts to follow it. I'm a finder, that's what I am, and I'm a monopolist."

"What is a finder?" asked the reporter.

"I'm a finder of things that are lost; that is, I hunts for 'em a good deal oftener than I finds 'em. You ain't no idea how many val'ble things is lost every day in this city—jewels, watches, purses, rolls of money, dogs and children. Not half the folks who loses thinks to advertise, but some does. They rush to the newspaper offices, and I waits here to get the earliest copies and read the advertisements."

"Is it possible you find things that have been lost so many hours before?"

"Sometimes, but not often. If I makes a good hit once in two weeks I'm satisfied. Just as often I don't make one in a month. You see, the 'ad' says very gen'lly, lost 'tween somewhere and somewhere. Well, I goes and I paces that district, and my eyes has got so sharp that they can tell the glint of a diamond or any shine from a bit of broken glass on the darkest night. Why, you and lots of people walks over lost things every day and never sees 'em. You walks with your eyes in the air, fixed on the folks and the windows, or the pavement 100 feet ahead of you. Mine is always close by my own feet, and I walks mighty slow. The gutters is the great place for lost things; they get drooped there by women who are allus in a hurry crossing roads, or they are knocked in by feet or dresses. Only the other day I was crossing a street and saw a muddy bit of card-board lying in the gutter. Ten thousand people would have passed by it, but I saw what looked like a pin sticking in it. I grabbed it, turned it over, and there, sure enough, was a gold breastpin set with pearls—stunners, too."

Nast and the Harpers.

Speaking of Josh Billings reminds me that his old chum, "Th. Nast," is in the dumps. The true inwardness of Nast's trouble with George William Curtis, editor of Harper's Weekly, has never come to light, but certain it is that the world's greatest cartoonist finds no place for his sketches in the paper his genius made famous. His contract with the Harpers is for $10,000 a year for life, and he draws $2,500 every quarter with unfaltering regularity. I understand that he sends his sketches to Harpers promptly every Monday afternoon, and they are as promptly put in a dark pigeon-hole. The Harpers will not use them, nor will they give up the contract, and hence Artist Nast is in a queer position. He is now acting as secretary of the Mann Boudoir Car company, with an office on Cortlandt street, near Broadway. His friends say he is unhappy and aging very fast. Funny, isn't it, that a man with $10,000 a year for life should be unhappy? If some people had the earth, and it fenced in with barbed wire, they would still be unhappy.—Chicago News.

Scientific Miscellany.

The kola nut, the stimulant so highly prized among African tribes that in times of scarcity a slave has been given for a single kernel, is the product of a tree of the family sterculiaceæ. Four or five of the seed, or nuts, grow together in a rough brown pod. Each seed has a red or white color, or both, and contains a kernel somewhat like that of a peanut and about two inches long. The taste of the nut is sweet, astringent and bitter in succession. The kola crop is gathered twice a year. When fresh the nut is chewed as if it were tobacco; when dry it is powdered and eaten. Its effect is remarkable, as it sustains the system for a long time under the greatest fatigues, even without food, while it is considered a certain preventive of dysentery. It is also said to make foul water drinkable and harmless. With the African tribes the kola nut is in order on all occasions, and is almost indispensable in important business transactions, in treaties, in declarations of war, as a present at weddings, in religious observances and in judicial proceedings.

In the last ten years relics of the industry of the early inhabitants of Switzerland known as the lake-dwellers have been accumulated in great quantities. Dr. Victor Gross states in a recent work that the articles of bronze alone which have been found in the lakes of Bienne and Neufchatel number 13,500, of which more than 5,000 are in his own collection. Many articles of stone, pottery and iron have been brought to light in addition. In these archæological discoveries Dr. Gross finds evidence that the period in which the prehistoric Swiss inhabited the dwellings built on the lakes was one of long duration, covering the successive stages of civilization from the primitive age in which metals were unknown and man's implements were rudely formed in coarse pottery and rough stones, through the age of fine-worked stone, followed by the age in which stones were still used and metals were introduced, then by the age of fine bronze and a highly-developed state of the arts, to the age in which iron appeared.

A single plant of a new species of potato—which has received the botanical name of Solanum Ohroudi—was some time ago discovered on a small uninhabited island at the mouth of the River Platte in South America. The tubers, about the size of hen's eggs, were carried to Europe and planted. The taste of the tubers was bitter, with a chestnut flavor, but under cultivation the quality is reported to be improving. The yield is abundant, and as little labor is required to raise the crop, it is thought that the new potato may furnish a desirable food for cattle even if it does not become sufficiently improved for table use.

The International Bureau of Weights and Measures, at Paris, whose object is to verify the metric standards of the world according to one universal standard, is able to perform work of really wonderful accuracy in its comparing rooms. With the means there provided, it is possible, according to Mr. H. J. Chaney, to ascertain a difference between two kilogram weights not greater than a three-hundred-millionth part of one of the weights; and in the comparison of two meters a difference so small as thirty-nine-ten-millionths of an inch (or one ten-thousandth of a millimeter) can be determined.

For several years a record has been kept of the health of six hundred and seventy-two persons employed in the aniline color works at Mochst-on-the-Main, in order to ascertain the extent to which aniline colors are liable to injure people handling them. And from the sky just like a hue,
Or like the starlight, clear and true.

My baby's eyes, a liquid roll,

MAKING OVER DRESSES.

The following suggestions respecting alterations, necessary to allow the growth, in wardrobes of girls of 6, or thereabouts, may be of use to mothers of large families with small means. Supposing there are some dark navy-blue serge frocks cut in one from last year, with gauged bodices and sleeves, which naturally look too short, and probably too scanty in the skirt, proceed as follows: Take off the gathered flounce round the edge of the skirt, damp it well, and press with a hot iron. Cut the flounce in two, make it up into a kilting about two inches deep, to trim all around. Open the skirt a little way at the side, and introduce a small gore or three-cornered piece of material, so as to allow a little more width. Lengthen the sleeves, which are probably found to be too short, either with a gathered piece of serge put on as a cuff, or with a puff at the top, if the length requires it, both at the wrist and shoulder. Plait up the little jet of drapery, that before hung nearly plain, as a kind of tunic with even folds, and tack it round the skirt, just above the knees, quite straight to the back, where it should finish off with loops and ends. The skirt at the sides must be drawn up with plaits, in order to give the serge top the appearance of a polonaise. To modernize the dress still further, and to make it long enough, arrange a kilted or box-plaited crimson cashmere skirt (for which purpose one yard is required) as an underpetticoat, the red being half a yard deep, with the exception of a strip taken off to face up the lining skirt under the flounce. This must be well fastened down with at least three tapes, and made the proper length by the addition at the top of a piece of black material.

For using as a skirt for wearing with navy blue, nothing looks better than the deep crimson now fashionable. The advantage of a little merino skirt like this is that it is useful for wearing with a light brown or Holland polonaise at any other time. The red kilted flounce should have a plain piece of material added to the top, and then put in a band, which can be tacked into the serge dress round the waist.

A black velveteen dress, cut all in one for a child of 6 years or so, can be treated as follows, if not shabby, although outgrown in every way: Obtain two yards of rich blue cashmere, and add a kilt of the same two inches deep all around the edge of the skirt. Embroider the sleeves with blue pointed [illegible] bead, and add a blue sailor collar.—Cut the skirt part of the dress in two all round, and insert a piece of black material the necessary depth to make it the proper length. Arrange all that is left of the cashmere into a drapery to go round the skirt, being opened about six inches in front, and then the rest of the depth of material being tightly gauged, while the raw edge is run close all round the dress and turned over just above the piece added for increase of length; or a sort of deeply folded sash can be made to hide the inserted piece. This should be finished off at the neck with bows and short ends, stitched all round on the right side with broad hem.

Black felt hats of the year before can have the color revived by sponging with ammonia, and, if trimmed with blue velvet puffing to match the cashmere, with a few gold pins inserted and with a feather, a good effect can be produced.

ODD TRINKETS.

In fancy jewelry everything odd and quaint finds favor. One brooch is an elephant's head in oxydized silver, with head trappings of gold, chased and fringed, with diamond eyes, and ivory tusks tipped with gold. Others are spiders with cats' eyes for bodies, and diamonds or emeralds for heads. There are dragon flies and beetles; paradise birds and humming birds; old Roman coins mounted on the fasces in gold, with silver bands tying the rods; crabs holding a pearl or cat's eye in their ugly claws, and pretty gypsy straw hats in gold with trimmings of ribbon or flowers in precious stones. The English ring of dull gold, either in crucible or beaten gold with sunk stones is the favorite style for gentlemen. For ladies the solitaire, the cluster, and the Marquise remain the first choice, with various fancy styles for those who affect the quaint and odd in jewelry. Scarfpins for gentlemen show a decided tendency toward the quaint and odd in design. There are standard patterns, notably the round pin, the dagger hilt, etc., with animals' heads and insects of all sorts, but the fashionable fancy is for something out of the ordinary style. Bits of crucible gold in odd shapes, with perhaps a single gem imbedded in the rough gold, are new and elegant.

Men of wealth and taste wear rare and curious stones in preference to diamonds for scarf-pins—star rubies, cat's-eyes, tourmalines in usual colors, etc.; and there is a great fancy for lapis lasuli, or the Alexandrite, with its changing green and red hues, for the lasiath—in short, everything which is not likely to be worn by the multitude.

Black onyx, with pearls and diamonds, for the only jewels, is still the one idea in mourning jewelry. Ladies in half-mourning wear silver ornaments, and in these there are many pretty and quaint fancies.

HORIZONTAL WALL PAPERS.

An English decorator makes the following suggestion with regard to wall paper: "I think it would be a great advantage and a novelty to print all the papers to hang horizontally, as well as the borders. It requires very great care and precison to get the filling paper perfectly upright, and if the first length hung at the beginning of a long wall, say twenty feet, should be the least out of a perpendicular, scarcely visible under the plumb line, it would make a difference easily discernible at the other end. In a set pattern especially it is necessary to hang the dado border all round the room to a certain mark or pattern in the filling paper. The plan I adopt besides hanging the filling paper perfectly upright is to draw a horizontal line round the room about two feet down from the cornice in order that I might prove the uprightness of the filling by getting a certain mark in the pattern on the line throughout as well as matching on the vertical edge. By hanging the filling paper horizontally, accuracy may be obtained in an easier and more perfect manner. In designing a filling paper for the purpose, it perhaps may be found necessary to give a different character to that which is hung vertically."

FANS AND GLOVES.

Handsome new fans in oval shape have appeared: One is made wholly of downy white feathers, pure as snow, and in the center of the fan is snugged a large tropical bird, whose brilliantly-colored feathers in scarlet, green and gold, show most effectively against the milk-white ones. On the heart of another white feather fan is set a bird's nest made of gold wire, intricately woven, and inside the nest are three tiny pearl eggs. The pearl handle at the top is tied with long loops and ends of white satin ribbon. A less expensive fan, made of black feathers with ebony handle, is finished in the center with a large cluster of scarlet velvet jalousies.

There is a growing tendency in fashionable circles to shorten the extravagant length of dress gloves. Many women who give great heed to all innovations of fashion are wearing gloves in four or five buttons only, thus leaving quite a space between the edge of the glove and that of the sleeve. Up till now it has long been inadmissible to expose any portion of the arm whatever. This change will be best accepted by women who have arms, not sticks, so-called.

PAINTING PANELS.

When you desire to paint upon your panels designs in oil or water colors, with tinted or gilded background, always consider first the relation in color between woodwork and walls. The skirting board, window frames, and doors should be darker than the walls, and the walls in turn darker than the ceiling. If your papering, for example be decided bird's egg blue, a rich effect in color may be gained by painting the doors and woodwork in dull Indian red. If yellow prevails on the walls, a dark, low-toned Antwerp blue may be used on the needlework; if Pompeian red, try dark brnoze green doors and skirting.—Decorator and Furnisher.

Story of a Free Pass.

Mrs. James P. Caldwell rode on a free pass the other day from Mexico, Mo., to Leadville, Col., to see her son. This pass was given to her husband and herself twenty years ago, and is a life pass for both, and will pass them over any railroad in the United States. It was given them by the North Missouri railroad company after they had respectfully declined the company's offer of a gift of $10,000. How the company happened to offer the couple—who were well-to-do in the world—a gift of $10,000 is told by the Hannibal Journal: In January, 1861, the confederate bushwhackers set fire to the bridge over Young's creek, and Mr. Caldwell got out of bed in season to check the flames with a pail of water. Then he hurried to Centralia to give the alarm, leaving his wife and children to keep the fire in check. It was a bitter cold night, and Mrs. Caldwell had to wrap her children in blankets, but despite the cold they worked and extinguished the flames. The bridge, however had been reduced to a mere shell, Mrs. Caldwell knew that it could not bear up a train that was almost due, and hurrying to her house, she got a lantern and stood on the bridge in the biting blasts of a January night until the train, with its freight of human life, had been warned and stopped.

A resident of the Wabash valley traveling in California was astonished when he first saw corn thriving in the dry and seemingly barren soil of Los Angeles county; but the farmers explained that beneath these cornfields is the subterranean outlet of some stream, and that they are watered from below. By digging down ten or twelve feet almost anywhere over the bed you will find the river, which reappears on the surface again in two different beds some miles further down, and then again sinks beneath the surface.

Muskoka.

The writ has been issued for the election of a member to represent this riding in place of Mr. Fauquier, unseated and disqualified. The nomination has been fixed for Wednesday, July 16th, and the polling of votes for Wednesday, July 23rd. Mr. J. W. Dill has been selected as the Reform standard bearer, and Mr. Niel McEachern, leader of the Tory forlorn hope. The Court of Appeal has, by a nearly unanimous decision, dismissed the appeal against Fauquier's disqualification. The Mail affects to minimize the sin that led to Mr. Fauquier's political ostracism. It unblushingly and mendaciously asserts: "Mr. Fauquier has been made to suffer for an offence which was of itself slight and unworthy of notice." According to the organ's reasoning, murder must be counted a petty offence. The wholesale corruption that marked the Tory manner of carrying on the last election contest in Muskoka has no parallel in the history of this Province, and it all had a bearing on driving Mr. Fauquier into political outlawry. The Mail, calling the operations of the bribery brigade in Muskoka "an offence slight and unworthy of notice," shows how utter are its depravity and shamelessness. One thing seems plain, however. The condign punishment that has visited Mr. Fauquier's "slight offence," will probably deter the bribery band from repeating at this election a marauding inroad similar to that of the last election. Still, one may expect that the peculiar devices of the Tory party will in some manner be put in operation to prevent the people from giving a free expression of their choice of a representative. "Frozen whiskey" will not, for meteorological reasons, form an element in the coming election, but some form of the hydra headed corruption at command of the party will be introduced, no doubt. The Mail's disparagement of the corruption of the last election is a covert invitation to the bribery brigade to muster, and, from past experience, it will not be wrong to predict that they will obey the summons.

The "Grand Old Man."

The spectacle of Hon. William Ewart Gladstone, the "People's William" and Great Britain's "uncrowned king," wielding and controlling with consummate tact, skill and vigour the destinies of the greatest nation on earth, at the age of 75 years, when most other men would be under ground or doting imbeciles, is a grand one. Since 1832, when he first entered the Parliament as representative of the borough of Newark, he has left his impress on the affairs of the nation, and to him are due some of the most important reforms of the present century. In 1845 he took a prominent part in the revision of the tariff, and the reduction of import duties that led to the establishment of the Free Trade principles of Great Britain. In 1868 he became Prime Minister; in 1869 he disestablished the Irish Church. The following year he passed the Irish Land Bill; in 1871 he abolished purchase of commissions in the army, in 1872 he enacted the Ballot Bill. His recent legislation and its success for the benefit of Ireland must be fresh in the public mind, and now, though embarassed by the howlings of Jingoism, and surrounded by plotters for place and power, he still pursues the aims for elevating the people and introducing great reforms, that have signalised his political career throughout. The Franchise Bill, by which two millions of British subjects have the ballots placed in their hands is his latest great work, and though the House of Lords, chiefly constituted, as it is, largely of the hereditary foes of political progress and national reform, may reject the bill, they will do so at their considerable peril. Mr. Gladstone's Egyptian policy has been subjected to severe criticism, in which his own supporters took some part, and the vote of censure, which, by the Premier's consummate division of his enemies' forces and energies, fell harmless, will probably be succeeded by a motion of want of confidence in the Ministry, and we do not doubt that the result will be another triumph for Mr. Gladstone. He has secured the assent of France, Germany, Italy and Austria to a conference on the Eastern question, which holds its sittings in London the same time the want of confidence motion will be spoken, defeat. If he thought there was any danger of the success of the motion, Mr. Gladstone would not probably muzzle the representatives of the great powers to practically witness his overthrow.

Hydrophobia and Its Cure.

A celebrated Englishman, Professor Ray Lankester, has very strongly advocated the establishment of a board of salaried investigators and scientists for the purposes of research, particularly for medicine, so that in the fields of science may be opened the mysteries hidden in future lobe further work. Such investigators, he argued, should be paid by the state, and their researches should be made public.

No doubt there is a great deal which might be said in justification of this plea for the "endowment of research." If able men were appointed to investigate some of the diseases to which flesh is heir, the result would, no doubt, be most valuable, and glorious triumph might be won in this direction. At present there orises the annual scare from hydrophobia. Doubtless the danger is greatly exaggerated. The awful disease is hardly so dependant upon temperature as is imagined. It may, in fact, be encountered at any season of the year, and not simply in what are known as the dog days. But that as yet no real remedy has been discovered for the terrible disease, and that it invariably ends fatally cannot be denied.

Here certainly is a subject for some patient official investigator. But, in England, no such state-paid scientist can be found. They do these things better in France, and at present that brilliant savant, M. Pasteur, is busily engaged in investigating the matter under the direction and assistance of the government. In fact, Pasteur believes he has already accomplished his purpose, and has found a nostrum, or rather an antidote. A man who can bring a remedy for a disease so unavoidable in its inception, so appalling in the suspense it inflicts, so terrible in its suffering and so certain in its result, surely deserves the title of a benefactor to his species and if M. Pasteur had done nothing more, this would be sufficient to immortalize his name.

It is established beyond a doubt that this awful disease, like so many others, is simply the result of multiplication and ravages of minute organisms, "bacilli," "bacteria," "microbes," or germs, and that these organisms can be bred and kept alive for considerable periods apart from the human or any other living body. So there is solid ground for hoping that some system of inoculation will yet become possible, as Pasteur suggests. Domestication produces the same lenitive effects upon these disease germs as upon all other forms of animal or vegetable life. Among our cultivated kitchen and flower gardens are numerous species descended directly from poisonous ancestors. Among our most useful animals are the ultimate offspring of wild and savage beasts. So a short course of domestication will, it is said, so far diminish the virus of the germs of rabies or dog-madness—as to enable us to be safely inoculated with no more serious consequences than occur in vaccination. The virus loses almost all its noxious qualities by having previously passed through a monkey, while, at the same time, it retains its singular power of fortifying the human body against an attack of the original malady. We know the same process exactly is followed in case of vaccination for small-pox, the only difference being that the vaccine is derived from the cow. But parents will hardly desire to secure their children against hydrophobia by inoculation, and as the disease is comparatively rare, the Government can hardly make inoculation obligatory. It is well known, however, that in cases of hydrophobia, there is a long period of incubation before the terrible effects become visible, so that the modified virus may be introduced with good effect after the danger is known.

Pasteur's discovery is to be tried immediately, and experiments and demonstrations will at once be made on such a scale as to prove whether or not it is as valuable as it appears to be. A commission has been appointed by the French Government to investigate the matter. By way of commencement, forty dogs are to be taken, one-half inoculated with Pasteur's protective virus, the remainder being in their ordinary condition, and they will be exposed to be bitten by mad dogs. Even a number of students have, it is said, offered to submit themselves, for the sake of suffering humanity, to this most trying ordeal also, so as to make assurance doubly sure. It is to be hoped, however, that they will not be called upon to undergo such a horrible thing, but that the experiments on the brute creation, which will cause sufficient suffering, will establish the truth of Pasteur's clever hypothesis.

If the result of this investigation is the deliverance of brute and man from an awful scourge which has hitherto defied the efforts of all skillful physicians, the most kind-hearted of men can hardly say Pasteur is not justified in inflicting such suffering.

In past ages this disease has met with most singular treatment, and remedies, the most repulsive and terrible have been resorted to. A woman of Buckinghamshire, less than twenty years ago, stated at an inquest upon a child who had died of hydrophobia, that she dragged the dog's dead body out of the river where it had been floating nine days, fried its liver and gave it to the child, who ate it greedily, drank some tea and died! Fried in oil and mixed with rosemary, "a hair of the dog that bit you," was considered a sovereign rustic remedy. "Some," says an ancient writer, who explains the fallacious practices of his predecessors, "some use ducking in sea-water." Another equally efficacious cure was the grass that grows in church-yards, and within recent years there is an account of a woman having been driven off by her kind neighbours (?) to browse away her hydrophobia among the tombs in an English village in Cornwall. Hellebore, tin garlic and treacle have all been credited with complete recoveries, and an American plant, "the Virginian skullcap," was highly spoken of for its good effects in 1812. It was stated that out of 850 persons bitten, three only developed symptoms of hydrophobia when treated with a decoction of the dried leaves of this tree. We all have heard the account given recently by a Russian doctor, who advocated the use of hot irons as an invariable method of success in curing the disease, however far it had advanced.

Prevention, however, is better than cure, and we shall all all be more likely to pin our faith to M. Pasteur's method should his investigation prove successful, since we can more readily understand the plan and agency proposed.

Hon. Senator Skead, of Ottawa, is dead. He has been associated with the growth of Ottawa from its earliest days, and leaves behind him the record of a long and useful life.

Mr. T. R. Black, Liberal, has been elected by acclamation to represent Cumberland county in Nova Scotia Legislature. He takes the seat vacated by Hon. C. J. Townshend, Conservative. By this result, the Liberals gain a constituency.

The term of Hon. Mr. Robitaille, Lieut.-Governor of Quebec, expires on the 26th July, and now the Dominion Government will be called on to do a little diplomacy in selecting his successor. The Ottawa Free Press nominates Hon. Alonzo Wright, M. P. for Ottawa county, for the position.

In his speech at Knowlton the other day, Mr. Blake gave some serious figures with reference to education in Quebec. The number of persons who cannot read was shown to be 191,000, or about 16 per cent. of the population, and of these who cannot write 244,769, or about 20½ per cent. of the whole population. In Ontario the non-readers number 57,600, or about 3½ per cent. of the whole population, and the non-writers about 5¾ per cent. of the population.

At the Convocation of Trinity College, Hon. G. W. Ross, Minister of Education, gave an able address. Speaking for the Government of Ontario, he said they would be delighted if all the colleges of the Province would agree on affiliation or federation. With the whole resources of Ontario at their disposal they would make a university that would be as strong as the best universities in England or on the continent.

The Tories and Tory newspapers hate Sir Richard Cartwright as much as they fear him. The Mail affects to belittle his abilities and influence, yet on Saturday it devoted two columns and a quarter to an alleged criticism of his recent speech, but the most formidable objection disclosed is that, in the hurry of writing out his notes for a daily paper, the reporter connects two subjects with a singular verb. The Mail is great on syntax, slang and foul language.

Mr. Wheeler, M.P. for west Ontario has resigned his seat and it is probable that Mr. J. D. Edgar, a gentleman of wide parliamentary experience will be the candidate, in which event he is certain of being elected. This riding is one of the "hived" constituencies, under the infamous gerrymander game. It would be a sort of poetical justice, if Mr. Edgar who was gerrymandered, as a dreaded opponent, out of Monck, should be returned from a "hived" riding to do battle against the corruptionists who misrule this country.

ADDRESS AND PRESENTATION.

Mr. R. Gibson, of Whitby, who had charge of the Myrtle section of the O. & Q. construction, having finished his work, the hands of the trains took the opportunity of presenting their friend and chief, Mr. Gibson, with a fitting testimonial. The money for the object was speedily collected, and the presentation was made at Myrtle on the 27th ult., Mr. Hugh Ryan kindly giving leave of absence for the occasion. On the assembling of the parties, Mr. Gibson was conducted to the improvised seat of honor in the freight shed by Messrs. Saulgrove, Darke and Henry. Mr. M. Collins then read the following

ADDRESS:

Mr. Gibson, who had been kept in the dark, was greatly surprised, and deeply affected by the evidence of kindly feeling he had just received, his emotions almost preventing his expressing, as he did, in a few graceful words, his acknowledgment of the splendid gift. Addresses complimentary of Mr. Gibson, were made by several of the employees. After partaking of refreshments the party separated.

Editorial Notes.

A WORKINGMAN'S GRIEVANCES.

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—I should like to inquire through the columns of your widely-circulated paper why it is that the present Government, after all the fine promises made to the workingmen from time to time, seem to delight in a course that always tells against the workingman and in favour of certain pampered political pets.

I allude more particularly to a matter that shows how the carelessness of the Government has affected the workingmen of Lakefield, who, through fine promises were swindled into giving their votes to the Government. Through the carelessness of the Public Works Department at Ottawa the top of the Burleigh dam has been allowed to come off, and it is in such a condition that square timber has to be sawed by way of Fenelon Falls and Lindsay instead of by Lakefield. Thus it comes about that a large number of workingmen in and about Lakefield are thrown out of employment. They used to have steady work and fair wages during the summer. But, now, owing to the carelessness of the Government, who promised them constant work and good wages, these very workingmen are compelled to leave their homes and families and, if they want a job at the work they best understand, go to Fenelon Falls or Lindsay to seek work, or go without work. Whereas, if the Burleigh dam had only a few dollars of the millions squandered on the Pacific Railway Syndicate, the workingmen of Lakefield would have had steady employment, business men would have had the profits coming from the timber trade, and the Lakefield branch of the Grand Trunk would have been kept busy moving timber.

Just notice how differently the Government treats its political pets, who are supposed to have political influence and to use it without much scruple at election times. The Messrs. Strickland have been treated most liberally by the Government, which gave the firm $5,000 for taking the old, ricketty Lakefield dam off the hands of the firm. Now, the firm almost begged the Ontario Government to take the dam off their hands as a gift, but they refused to take it. But the Ottawa Government, so very liberal with our money, gives them $5,000. The benefit of this job to the Stricklands may be shown by the fact that the dam was built in the short space of seven weeks, 24 years ago, with from 9 to 13 men only employed. Timber was cheap in those days, and wages low, and the cost of the dam, anybody can see, was less than half of $5,000. After a quarter of a century this old shaky dam, which has had to be built over, is taken off the Stricklands' hands, to be maintained by the Government, the firm to get all the benefit of its being kept in repair, and a bonus of $5,000 given in addition.

That's the way money goes, and that's the way political pets are rewarded, while the poor workingman may starve or beg, for all the Government cares. My fellow-workingmen, as well as myself, generally voted for this precious N. P. Government, which has taxed almost everything we use; and, now, see how we are treated. We are mighty fine fellows at election times. We are patted on the back, flattered and fed with taffy till our votes are secured, and then kicked aside. And, yet, at the next election the political pets and other political sharps will come to us with the same old yarn, but they will get mighty tart answers from the toilers of Lakefield.

Yours truly,
WORKINGMAN.

Lakefield, July 1st, 1884.

Presbytery of Peterborough.

WARREN LELAND,

whose photograph figures as the undoubted manager of the

of America, says that whilst a passenger from New York on board a ship going around Cape Horn, in the early days of emigration to California, he learned that one of the officers of the vessel had cured himself, during the voyage, of an obstinate disease by the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Since then Mr. LELAND has recommended AYER'S SARSAPARILLA in many similar cases, and he has never yet heard of its failure to effect a radical cure.

Some years ago one of Mr. LELAND'S farm laborers bruised his leg. Owing to the bad state of his blood, an ugly scrofulous swelling or lump appeared on the injured limb. Horrible itching of the skin, with burning and darting pains through the lump, made life almost intolerable. The leg became enormously enlarged, and running ulcers formed, discharging great quantities of extremely offensive matter. No treatment was of any avail until the man, by Mr. LELAND'S direction, was supplied with AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, which allayed the pain and irritation, healed the sores, removed the swelling, and completely restored the limb to use.

Mr. LELAND has personally used

for Rheumatism, with entire success; and, after careful observation, declares that, in his belief, there is no medicine in the world equal to it for the cure of Liver Disorders, Gout, the effects of high living, Salt Rheum, Sores, Eruptions, and all the various forms of blood diseases.

We have Mr. LELAND'S permission to invite all who may desire further evidence in regard to the extraordinary curative powers of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA to see him personally either at his mammoth Ocean Hotel, Long Branch, or at the popular Leland Hotel, Broadway, 27th and 28th Streets, New York.

Mr. LELAND'S extensive knowledge of the good done by this unequalled eradicator of blood poisons enables him to give inquirers much valuable information.

WALKER'S PATENT LOAD LIFTER.

The subscriber offers for sale the patent right to make and sell his valuable LOAD LIFTER, for farm barn use. The Lifter will raise the heaviest loads of hay or grain to any desired height in a barn. It is also useful for lifting threshers, reapers, beef animals, or any heavy load. ONE HORSE will raise 3000 lbs. with ease. The advantage of this machine is that by using it the farmer saves the wages of one man all the time, and of two part of the time. When the load is raised high the pitching is all down, and a load can be tumbled off in one-third the time it can be pitched up. In 1883 there was only one machine in use. Now it is used with the highest satisfaction by the following farmers:—

OTONABEE—T. Blezard, M.P.P., P. Cameron, W. Walker, John Lang, Reeve, T. Shearer, P. Elmhirst, A. Nelson, A. S. Nelson, G. Keson, T. G. Hazlitt.

BOARD OF HEALTH.

The Members and the Butchers take Counsel together—Must the Slaughter Houses go?—A Friendly Talk That Ends in Talk.

The Peterborough Board of Health attempted to meet pursuant to adjournment. The following members only were present. Messrs. McNeil, chairman, Green and Patterson.

On the invitation, given by unanimous resolution of the full board at its previous meeting the butchering guild was on hand and was represented by Messrs. Wainwright, O'Brien, Winch, Thompson, White, Trotter, McNairn, Laplante, Cumming, Whalen, Coe, and Nelvin, Messrs. Matthews & Son, Peterborough Pork Packing establishment were also present but disclaimed being present as butchers—pork packing was their business.

After waiting till nearly nine o'clock the chairman said the absence of the other members of the board need not prevent an attempt to arrive at the object of the board in calling the conference with the proprietors of the different slaughter houses. There was a disposition on the part of the Board to enforce clause eight of the Health By-law which read as follows :

"No proprietor or tenant of any shop, house or other house, shall, nor shall any butcher or other person, use any such house, shop or out-house at any time as a slaughter-house or for the purpose of slaughtering any animals therein, unless such shop, house or outhouse be distant over twenty-seven yards from any dwelling-house and distant not less than seventy yards from any public street."

While inclined to enforce this clause the board did not wish to use harsh measures and they had thought that by inviting the butchers to talk the matter over, an arrangement might be agreed upon by which a common slaughter house or abattoir to be used by all the butchers, might be erected at some proper place outside the town. He then invited the butchers present to express their views.

Mr. Harry Winch said he had been to a great expense to fit up a suitable place for his business, and he took great pains to keep it in a condition so as not to annoy his neighbors and he had succeeded so well that he had no complaints. He thought it somewhat of a hardship that he should be deprived of the benefit of the improvements he had made. Yet he was willing to submit to the law. He could get all his neighbors to certify that his slaughtering premises were free from offensive smells

Mr. Matthews, Lindsay, claimed he should not be classed as a butcher—he was a pork packer. He had visited slaughter houses in Toronto and Hamilton and some of their slaughtering places were in the same relative position to the town as the grain warehouses on Bethune street were to Peterborough. He described the excellent arrangements he had made to ensure perfect cleanliness. He added that he was compelled in his business to kill hogs in the summer time, and if he were not allowed to do so he would have to close his packing establishment. He believed in sanitary measures but he claimed his place was without the least offence and did not come within the provisions of the act relating to slaughter houses.

Mr. Wainwright, admitted his place smelt badly, but no slaughter house could be kept without smell. He had taken as much pains as he could afford to do, to keep down the smells. If he had to go he supposed he must, but he did not know where to go. He had done his best, and if he had not entirely succeeded in keeping down smells that was no reason why other slaughter houses should be disturbed. He employed one man who did little else than keep his place clean. If he had to go it would be a great loss to him.

Mr. N. T. Laplante, said he thought his slaughter house could be kept without smell. The worst source of smells in connection with slaughter houses, was keeping pigs and rendering tallow—and no smell came from the latter unless kept until it was foul. It would be a great inconvenience to remove his slaughter house. He thought if the inspector made frequent visits, and insisted on exact cleanliness, the object sought might be gained. Those who kept uncleanly places might be punished. If this was done as a trial, he thought there would be no cause for complaint. If the butchers had to remove it would be a great expense and the result would be an increase in the price of meat as a matter of self protection on the part of the butchers.

The chairman here said that the board had suggested this conference, with a view of agreeing upon some way, whereby some plan might be devised for erecting a slaughter house for common use.

Mr. Laplante thought that would be hardly practicable. Several of the butchers lived in opposite parts of the town. He hoped that the conditions as to cleanliness, might be enforced to allow the slaughter houses to remain. He alluded to other nuisances which might be abated, such as Spalding's bay—"the doctors' harvest field" and the sawdust in the river.

Mr. Matthews, said the co-operative slaughter house would not suit him at all. He had to depend on his refrigerators to keep his pork cool, he could not carry on business without them. If the by-law were enforced he would have to close his establishment. He again insisted that his place should not be classed as a slaughter house—the mere killing was a small part of the business, and was only done in the summer months to keep up the supply for packing.

Mr. Green, did not see why discrimination should not be made here as well as in Toronto.

Mr. Winch, showed that the idea of a common slaughter house would not do. It would be necessary if the clause were enforced for each butcher to build himself a slaughter house outside the limits—Messrs. Wainwright, Laplante and the others agreed with this statement.

Mr. Wainwright, thought that if the by-law were enforced as to the butchers, that Mr. Matthews should not be excluded for the operations of the by-law. He did not think there was a butcher present who would object to his remaining undisturbed. This expression of liberality was warmly applauded.

Mr. Patterson, regretted that there was not a fuller meeting of the Board, a very natural expression under the circumstances. [The board had specially invited the butchers to be present; the latter had turned out almost to a man, while there were only three members of the board present at a meeting of their own appointment.

The conference then over, nothing further to be done, and he thanked the butchers on behalf of the board for their attendance. The conference then concluded.

An Emergency Meeting.

A special meeting of the Board was held on Monday night. Present,—Messrs. McNeil, Chairman, Allin, Rutherford, Stapleton, Hartley, Paterson and Green.

There were also present of the butchers, Messrs. Winch, Laplante, O'Brien and White.

The Chairman explained that the butchers had met forth their views at an informal meeting of the Board on Thursday night, and, as the opinions they then held were still retained, there was no need of keeping the butchers there that night, and they accordingly retired.

After routine,

Communications were received relating to nuisances, and referred to the Sanitary Inspectors.

The Chairman said the present meeting had been called because there was no quorum at the last meeting to decide as to the matter of slaughter houses. After a good deal of informal talk, at length,

Mr. Allin moved, seconded by Mr. Paterson, that the butchers of the town of Peterborough, for the time being, be allowed to slaughter in their own slaughter houses, the said slaughter houses to be inspected by the Sanitary Inspectors, and at any time, if found to be a nuisance, they have power to remove them immediately.

The Chairman said that the motion was contrary to the express provision of clause eight, and he could not put it.

Mr. Paterson said he was in favour of proceeding leniently, as it was probable that at the next session of the Legislature the more stringent provisions of the Act would be modified.

The Chairman suggested a modification of Mr. Allin's resolution, and accordingly,

Mr. Allin moved, seconded by Mr. Paterson, that the Sanitary Inspectors be instructed to regularly inspect the slaughter houses, and, if at any time they find them in any way a nuisance, they be instructed to enforce rule eight of the health by-law. The motion was carried.

Dr. Clark, Medical Health Officer, who had just returned from Toronto, explained that in that city the by-law was not rigidly enforced, but that it was regarded as a tentative measure, and one that would, in some of its provisions, be considerably amended. After Dr. Clarke had given explanations as to the working and simplicity of a new and cheap form of earth closet, designed to supplant the noxious privy vault, the Board adjourned to meet at the call of the Chairman.

The Best Butter Color.

The great unanimity with which dairymen of high reputation have adopted, in preference to anything else, the Improved Butter Color made by Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt. is remarkable. It shows that the claims of imitative colors are baseless, wise dairymen will use no other.

ANSTRUTHER.

(From Our Own Correspondent.

We had a good shower of rain last week. It was much needed as we had a great fire here on Tuesday last. Some person put out fire on Monday, on lot 37 in the 4 concession. And as the wind was from the south-west it blew the fire into John Young's farm and burned about two miles of cedar fence and 15 or 20 acres of meadow. Only for the help of the neighbors, who turned out and gave valuable assistance, his house and barns would have been burned. Some other farmers had fences burned also. The hay crop was very dry and withered and the fire ran very fast over it. There is little doubt that it was maliciously done as a certain person had been using threatening language towards Mr. Young. There will hardly be four hundred weight of hay to the acre here this harvest and Oats and Wheat will be short. This is the driest summer we have for twenty years.

APSLEY.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

On Tuesday, July 1st, a very interesting game of Base Ball was played at Clydesdale between the Apsley Clippers, and the Clydesdale Club, resulting in a victory for the Apsley team by a score of nineteen runs.

PORT PERRY.

About 12.20 Thursday morning a fire broke out in the stables of the Mansion house here, and in three hours every business establishment in the heart of the village was a smouldering ruin, not one mercantile establishment being left. On Friday not even a paper of pins could be purchased in the village. The fire spread from the place of starting in every direction: north to Corrigan's stores on Queen street, thence east to Water street and west two blocks, south and west taking in Mary street and Perry street, the latter on both sides. On Queen street it crossed to the north side, taking Megraw's temporary hotel built on the ruins of the fire of November last, sweeping west to John street and north to North Street. When day dawned not a wall was left standing in the area traversed by the devouring element. It is impossible at this time to estimate the losses. They are put at not less than a quarter of a million, of which it is estimated about only half is covered by insurance.

THE POPE'S ANTI-MASONIC ENCYCLICAL.

The following is an extract from the great speech delivered by the Earl of Carnarvon at the recent meeting of the Grand Lodge of England :—I am convinced that social order and religion have no stronger friends, no truer pillars to rest upon than the Masonic bodies of England. (Hear, hear.) I deeply regret, brethren, that any person in the position of the Pope should have been so far misled by false representations as to put his hand—I am sure most unadvisedly—to such a misstatement of facts as this encyclical contains. I wish that, think that anything I can say or that any one could do here would open his eyes to the facts of the case; but, whether that be so or not, we have one duty to ourselves and to the ancient and venerable order that we represent, and it is this: in the most temperate language that we can command, but at the same time the most decisive, to protest against this charge, and to spread far and wide our protest against it, and with this object I beg now to submit to the Grand Lodge a motion, trusting that on this as on the former occasion to which I alluded, there will be neither dissentient voice nor gainsay. I beg now to move "First, that this Grand Lodge has seen with great regret the recent encyclical letter in which the charges of atheism, sedition, and vice are made against Masonry in general without discrimination: and, secondly, that this Grand Lodge, whilst it does not deny that meetings for political and seditious purposes have in some countries been held under the pretense of their being Masonic Lodges, can only express its astonishment and regret that English Freemasonry should by some misapprehension of facts be included in this sweeping charge, which the law, practices, and traditions of the Order as well as the position of its rulers, clearly prove to be utterly without foundation." (Cheers.)

Mr. JOHN HAVERS, Past Grand Warden, seconded the motion, which was then put and carried unanimously, amidst general applause.

Grand Lodge then proceeded with Masonic business and was afterwards closed in ample form.

Almost every person has some form of scrofulous poison latent in his veins. When this develops in scrofulous sores, ulcers, or eruptions, or takes the form of rheumatism or organic diseases, the suffering that ensues is terrible beyond description. Hence the gratitude of those who discover, as thousands yearly do, that Ayer's Sarsaparilla will thoroughly eradicate this evil from the system.

Faithful to Death;

OR, THE FARMER'S DAUGHTER.

With the light of love in her eyes, with the dainty, wind-blown bloom on her face, it was not to be wondered at that the two ladies looked surprised, as though an angel had suddenly appeared before them.

The elder one looked very dignified,—the younger spoke.

"Is this Larch Hill Farm?" she asked, in a pleasant voice.

"Yes," replied Ruth.

"Is Mr. St. John [illegible]?" was the next question, and a sudden tender light [illegible] in the girl's face. Both ladies made a little mental comment upon it.

"Yes," she replied again; but this time the word was more uncertain.

What did these magnificently-dressed ladies want with him?

"Will you say that Lady Gerton and Lady May Carleton wish to see him?" continued the younger lady.

"Mr. St. John is not in the house; will you be pleased to wait in the drawing-room, and I will find him."

With stately and dignified tread the two ladies followed her, and were left in the pretty grass draw[illegible]room alone.

CHAPTER IX.

That morning, a beautiful day in August, a sudden impulse had seized Lady May Carleton. She reached home on the night before—her home then was with her cousin, Lady Gerton, at Queen's Gardens, Hyde Park—and she had been thinking a great deal of her lover. Her absence had been prolonged. She had remained for some weeks longer than she had intended, and now she felt anxious over him. He had been for some time at the farm; his illness must have been even more serious than she had thought it, if it necessitated all this recruiting. She had not heard from him for some time, and she felt, perhaps, more anxious than she had ever done before over him.

Lady Gerton was a wealthy, middle-aged widow, not particularly good-looking, but with plenty of force of character. She was Lady May's chosen friend, and on the evening of her arrival they had a long and cosy conversation.

"Drive down to-morrow," said Lady Gerton, suddenly. "Aspendale is not more than twenty miles from town; drive down, and then you will see for yourself how Mr. St. John is. I will go with you. It will be a pleasant drive."

"It will be a very long one," said Lady May, doubtfully; she was very fond of Eric, but she never thought of making any sacrifice for him. "The day is sure to be hot, too," she added.

Lady Gerton laughed.

"No one will ever accuse you of being deeply in love, May," she said. "Such trifles as time, distance, heat, or cold should be nothing to lovers."

"I am quite willing to go," said Lady May, and she wondered why her cousin laughed again.

"It is very good of you," said Lady Gerton. "If it be settled that we go, I will give orders about the carriage to-night."

The result was that on this fine, bright, August morning, the two ladies started on the long drive to Larch Hill Farm.

"You will take Mr. St. John quite by surprise, Lady May," said her cousin, "he does not know that you are in England, does he?"

"No, I suppose not; I gave him no date when I wrote to him."

"He will be delighted," said Lady Gerton, and Lady May looked supremely conscious that she was about to bestow great pleasure, and a great honor upon someone.

They had a very pleasant drive; the sun was not too warm, or the roads too dusty. They reached the farm in very good spirits, neither of them expected in the least the beautiful apparition who appeared in the porch. There was dead silence for some few minutes after the two ladies were seated, then Lady Gerton spoke.

"Did you notice," she asked, "what a very beautiful girl that was who came to us?"

"Passable," replied Lady May.

"Passable! I tell you she is beautiful!" cried Lady Gerton. Then she added, solemnly, "Did you see how her face flushed at the mention of Mr. St. John's name?"

"Shyness," curtly replied Lady May.

"I hope so," said Lady Gerton. "I am not of a suspicious turn of mind,—not at all; but taking all things together, I do not think you have come to Larch Hill one moment too soon," and then Lady Gerton said no more.

Lady May rose and looked round the room.

"A pretty place," she said, "but very quiet. I do not know how Mr. St. John has contrived to get on here."

"He has had his amusements without doubt," said Lady Gerton, significantly.

There came a knock at the door, and Mrs. Vaughan entered in a state of great confusion and nervous agitation.

"Pray do not apologise," said Lady May, briskly. "There is not the least need. No one could expect that you should stand at your door awaiting chance visitors. We were not detained long. We came without giving you warning; so that we must be content. Do you know where Mr. St. John is?"

"Out in the fields," replied poor Mrs. Vaughan, utterly annihilated by the grandeur and dignity of her visitors.

"We shall be glad to see him as soon as possible," said Lady May. "Can the carriage be put up and the horses fed here? The men can go to the hotel at Aspendale, and perhaps you can give us a little dinner with Mr. St. John?"

To all of which the bewildered woman answered "Yes."

In the meantime Ruth had found her hat and had gone in search of her lover. Her lover,—ah! yes, she could call him so now. Her lover,—the bravest, truest, and most beautiful! He said he should go over the hill. She stood at the end of the garden, shading her eyes from the sun, and looking for him. A sudden gleam of light and joy came from her eyes when she caught sight of him.

She hastened to him and told him her news, that two very grand ladies had come to see him, and were waiting for him in the drawing-room; she added that one was Lady Gerton, the other Lady May Carleton, and he felt back with a white scared face like one who had received a sudden blow.

"You do not like them," she said, with quick instinct. "You would rather not see them? Let me go back and make some excuse for you."

"No, I must see them," he said, "they are very old friends of mine. I must see them."

She knew that for some reason or other he wished they had not come. She looked at him with loving eyes, full of sympathy.

"These are the first visitors you have had since you came here," she said, "but I wish they had not come to-day, our happy day."

He went slowly back to the house; in those few minutes he had realised it all, had realised that he was engaged to be married to Lady May, that he did not love her at all, but that all the love of his heart was given to Bonnie Doon. He looked very ill when he entered the little drawing-room.

Lady May went to meet him. There was no attempt at kissing.

"You look very ill, Eric," she said. "I am sorry not to find you looking better."

He murmured something about hoping to be better soon, and Lady Gerton joined in.

"You have been here three months," she said, "and you are quite the better for it. Come back with us to-night, and we will go to Gerton Terrace to-morrow."

"I could not," he said.

"You must," said Lady Gerton, most emphatically. "If I were Lady May I should insist upon it."

"I think," said Lady May, "that it would be best; you have given the place a fair trial, and it has not suited you; you must leave it sometime, you may as well come now."

"I must have time," he said, despairingly.

"There is no need," replied Lady May, calmly; "you cannot have many things here, and these good women will pack for you."

"Good women!" Oh Bonnie Doon, what a name to give your [illegible] talk about [illegible]," said [illegible]. "I have not thought [illegible] quite steady [illegible]."

"And [illegible] Hill [illegible] stay here," said Lady Gerton, decidedly. "You wanted change and quiet, but I think you have had quiet [illegible] long. If you are a wise man now, you will seek change of scene; you must have been very dull here."

"Dull," he repeated, mechanically, and then it suddenly occurred to him that he had not found one dull moment since he had been there.

"You want society, now," said Lady May, with that briskness which was so completely the reverse of all that was tender, "society and something to rouse you a little."

Ah, Bonnie Doon! would he ever again find society like hers? Could he leave her? Why, now that he began to realise matters, his very heart clung to the simple homestead, and those who dwelt therein. He realised it when he looked in the face of his future wife.

"We will talk about it afterwards," he said. "I hope I shall have the pleasure of entertaining you. Mrs. Vaughan will do her best in the way of dinner."

"Of course we shall stay," said Lady May. "It is a twenty mile drive from the town. We can have a room, I suppose, Eric?"

Then Mr. St. John rang for Mrs. Vaughan, and asked her to show the ladies into a room. On the way to the "best bed-room" of the old farmhouse, they met Ruth.

She looked lovelier than ever; and when they were alone Lady Gerton went up to her cousin.

"May," she said, "I know you to be a sensible woman, or I should be afraid to speak. People seldom receive any thanks for interfering with the affairs of their friends. I know you are not a sentimental girl, but a sensible woman, and I advise you to persuade Mr. St. John to leave this place to-night."

Lady May's pleasant face had grown pale.

"Why?" she asked; but in her heart she knew the answer that was coming.

"He is fond of that girl," said Lady Gerton, decidedly, "and the girl loves him. I can tell from his manner there is something wrong, and I can tell from her face she loves him."

"Do you not think that you may be too quick in your judgment?" she said.

"No. Mind, I am saying nothing against Mr. St. John. Men think nothing of these little affairs. He has probably flirted with her as he has done with a score of others whose names are forgotten now, and she will be forgotten as soon. The difference is, this girl would take a thing of this kind most seriously to heart.

"How do you know that?" asked Lady May.

"Girls with those large dreamy eyes are all alike," said her ladyship, oracularly. "Sentimental to the last degree. The best thing will be for him to return with us at once."

"I think you are right," said Lady May, quietly, but she lost some of her briskness and brightness during the last few hours; this was not at all what she had expected.

"Leave the girl to me," said Lady Gerton. "In all probability the people here know nothing of his engagement. I shall just mention you casually as the lady whom he is going to marry, and all will be well."

So Bonnie Doon went about her work that morning without knowing of the sword that hung over her head ready at any moment to fall.

CHAPTER X.

It was surely one of the most quaint and curious scenes ever witnessed; the two fashionable high-bred women in the little green drawing-room, sacred to the memory of Bonnie Doon.

The room, which when Ruth was in it looked like a shrine for a gem, seemed too small for them; they filled it to overflowing. They were far too well bred to make any comments upon it.

Eric St. John was ill at ease, and he could not conceal it. He talked to Lady Gerton about his illness, and of all that was passing in London. He talked to Lady May of her travels, but from him there came no allusion as to the future, and certainly no word that betrayed the lover.

Then Ruth came in to prepare the room for dinner. Eric looked at his guests with a laugh.

"I do not know how you will like it," he said, "but I have only this one room for dining and sitting room."

"It will be a picnic," laughed Lady Gerton.

"We will make our drawing-room out under the trees," said Lady May.

They watched the girl with curious intentness as she went swiftly about her work.

Lady May sighed just a little, as she noted the exquisite face with its wind-blown bloom. She was somewhat reassured when she saw the signs and traces of work on the otherwise pretty hands.

Ruth wore a pretty dress of pale blue print, with white lace round her throat; her beautiful waving hair rippled back from the white brow over her pretty ears, and was fastened in a knot; fastened, though its lovely golden ringlets escaped.

"I would give my right hand for hair like that," thought Lady Gerton. "Why could I not have it? The right things are always given to the wrong persons. If I had had hair like that, I would have been a duchess at least."

Lady May thought to herself,—"Where and how has a country girl acquired that grace and refinement?"

Ruth looked like a tall white lily; they could not help admiring her. Lady Gerton noticed one thing—that when duty of any kind brought her into the room, Eric was less than ever like a lover; was more ill at ease than ever, and she drew her own conclusions.

"We have not come one day too soon," she said to herself over and over again, "that is, if May really cares for him."

Both ladies were well pleased with the nice little dinner that Mrs. Vaughan served up to them. When it was over, Lady May proposed that they should have wine and fruit out under the trees. She was good-natured and by no means proud.

"You have some good champagne, Eric," she said; "my favorite brand. The one thing that really tries my nerves is inferior wine."

"I did not think you had any nerves," said Eric.

"You could not pay me a greater compliment," she replied, and in truth Lady May was far more delighted than if her lover had complimented her on beauty or talent. Her good nature was in the ascendant.

"Shall I ask the—the young person who assisted us to take a glass of wine?" she asked, and Lady Gerton noticed how his face flushed when he answered,—

"No; she would not care about it."

Although the sun shone, and the flowers bloomed fair, although the table under the trees was laden with fruit, the party gathered round it was not a very cheerful one.

"Your illness has greatly changed you, Eric," said Lady May. "You seem to have lost all your spirits."

He tried then to rouse himself and do his best; but his thoughts were all with Bonnie Doon, and what he was to do. He loved one woman, and was engaged to marry another.

What could he do? The engagement to Lady May seemed like fate, and was of long standing, but he loved Bonnie Doon, and the love was new, sweet, and bewildering to him, as it was to her. What should he do? Obey the dictates of honor and marry Lady May, or obey the voice of his heart and marry Bonnie Doon?

While they talked of Paris and London, of court and opera; while they discussed the affairs of relatives and friends, he was asking himself the question, what was he to do, and for the first time it occurred to him that he had already done wrong; that he ought not to have made a petted favorite of this beautiful girl while he was engaged to marry another woman. Who could have thought, he asked himself, that this woman love happened? He had never taken love into account when laying plans for his life. Now, quite suddenly, it proved to be his life's ruler.

"There is only one comfort in it all," he said to himself, and that is, "I have not done wrong on purpose."

Still the ladies talked on, and the sun shone, and the flowers bloomed. Suddenly Lady May caught sight of Ruth going to feed the pigeons.

"What a strange thing to see such a refined looking girl in a country farmhouse, Eric," she said.

"The fairest flowers bloom quite unseen," replied her lover, and she opened her brown eyes in wonder.

"How poetical you are, Eric. Well, she is like a flower. I wish she would come to us. I should like to talk to her. I noticed something strange about her accent—quite provincial."

How the words jarred upon him who could not think of Bonnie Doon as anything but the sweetest, dearest, and most perfect.

"She sings very sweetly," he said; "I have never heard a more musical voice," and as he spoke the words rose before him in letters of fire,—

"My fause lover stole the rose,
But ah! he left the thorn wi' me."

Lady Gerton laughed.

"Music is such a common accomplishment," she said, "in these days; the real distinction is neither to play nor sing."

"I do not see how that affects the beauty of the girl's voice," said Eric, curtly, and Lady Gerton laughed again; she was growing more and more sure that her ideas were correct. Then Ruth passed so near the end of the garden where they were seated, that Eric said to her,—

"Miss Vaughan, Lady May Carleton would like to see you."

Never was so fair a picture as Ruth when she came in obedience to her lover's summons. He might well, in his own mind, compare her to a tall, sweet white lily; the sunshine lay on her hair, the fairest bloom on her beautiful face; there, too, shone love, pride, fear, timidity, and the whole made her so gloriously beautiful that the two fashionable ladies looked at her in wonder.

She hardly saw them; she knew they were there; it was her lover's dark, handsome face that drew her eyes,—her heart; they were less than nothing, great ladies though they were. She saw and heard only her lover. He rose when she came forward, and bowed to her.

"Lady May Carleton wishes to see you, Miss Vaughan," he said, with grave courtesy.

She raised her eyes to his—only for one moment; his glance met hers, and said plainly,—

"Have no fear, I will take care of you."

She would have faced a hundred duchesses after that. She looked the fairest picture of girlish modesty as she stood before Lady May, shy, and graceful, but quiet and self-possessed. Eric thought that, in her sweet presence, the two ladies looked common-place enough.

And Lady May, strange to say, was at a loss to know how to begin. There was something in Ruth that made patronage ridiculous.

"You have been feeding your pigeons," she said, by way of commencement. "They seem very tame."

"They know me well," said Ruth.

"You have a pleasant home," said Lady May, "and what fine old trees. You would not like to change this for town life, would you?"

"No, I should not," said Ruth, and then Lady May favored her with her most gracious smile.

"We have all to thank you for your care of Mr. St. John. You have nursed him well."

Thank her for nursing him. Why, it had been the greatest pride, pleasure, and delight of her life; besides, he belonged to her in some especial manner. What had anyone to do with it? She looked with fearless glance at the grand lady before her.

"It has been a great pleasure," she answered, simply.

"Was it?" replied Lady May, and there was the faintest touch of sarcasm in her voice. It fell unheeded on the ears of Bonnie Doon. "Do you ever come to London?"

"No; I have never been farther than Aspendale," said Ruth.

"Listen to that, Lady Gerton, 'never been farther than Aspendale!'" cried Lady May, then she continued—"If ever you do go, I shall be pleased if you will call upon me," and Lady May thought she was most kind and condescending.

"I thank you," said Ruth, gently; "but I do not think I shall ever go to London."

"You cannot tell," said Lady May, and she thought to herself that it was very improbable indeed such a girl as this would live and die in the old farmhouse. "One never knows what is to happen," she said, still with the same pleasant sense of condescension.

Then something happened which convinced Lady Gerton it was time to do her duty.

Ruth dropped the pretty little basket that had held the pigeons' corn, and Eric stepped forward eagerly to pick it up. She saw the glance that passed between them—the entire and absolute love on her side, something like adoration on his.

"It is high time someone interferes," thought Lady Gerton. "If ever I read love in any eyes, I read it in theirs. He does not speak to her either, that is a bad sign, he dare not trust himself. It must have been a special providence that brought us here to-day."

Yet her eyes lingered with admiration on that most fair young face.

There could be no greater contrast than the beautiful girl and the active sensible woman. Lady Gerton owned to herself that the farmer's daughter had loveliness enough to attract any man.

"She need not have dressed herself like one of Fra Angelico's saints," thought Lady Gerton, "she would send an æsthetic wild if, as she stands there, she held a white lily in her hand."

She read the same admiration in Eric St. John's face, and then she said to herself, "It was time to act."

CHAPTER XI.

Quite time to act! Lady Gerton was warmly attached to her cousin, and although she knew there was no sentimental nonsense about her, she knew also that Lady May was warmly attached to Eric St. John in her own sensible, practical fashion. That her cousin's happiness should be blighted, or her life marred by this simple country girl, was cruel and was nonsense. Lady Gerton was a woman of the world; nothing ever surprised or astonished her. She flattered herself that she knew some man shut up in a quiet farmhouse with a beautiful young girl! What more natural than a little sentiment or flirtation? And the girl was really very pretty. No doubt there had been quite an enjoyable little flirtation, but it must end now; there had been enough of it. Lady May's happiness was to be thought of, and though Lady May was a generous and most unsuspecting woman, she would certainly be unhappy if she noticed anything.

Two duties lay plainly before Lady Gerton. The first was that she must tell the girl that Lady May Carleton and Mr. St. John were to be married. The second was that she must do her best to make him return to town that evening; then she would have accomplished a duty.

She rose so suddenly as to scatter the flowers she had been holding over the green grass.

"You must gather some more for me, Mr. St. John," she said, laughing. "We must carry some of these sweet country flowers back to town. Miss—Miss—Vaughn, will you take me to see your pigeons? I am interested in pigeons."

"As they are shot at Hurlingham,—not in any other fashion," interrupted Lady May.

Ruth, with her sweet, serious manner, replied,—

"I shall be very pleased to show you anything on the farm that interests you," and for half a minute Lady Gerton felt some little misgivings, some relenting towards the girl whose heart she was going to break. Perhaps a sportsman looks half with regret at the golden breasted pheasant, at the lofty soaring bird, the mark for his gun; perhaps a butcher pauses for a moment when his knife is at the throat of a little white lamb. Certain it is that Lady Gerton did not enjoy the performance of her duty as she had expected to do. For Ruth took her to see the pigeons and the birds; she was so gentle and so sweet with her, so graceful in her pretty shyness, that Lady Gerton's heart relented.

As the two went from the garden, leaving Eric and Lady May together, Ruth turned to look at him. He will always remember how a sunbeam had fallen on her head and brightened her face. All the love in her heart showed in her eyes as they met his, and as he saw her that moment he never saw her again. And the face of her lover, as she saw it in that moment was with her until she died.

It was when they had gone, and no sound broke the beautiful silence, save the song of birds, that Lady May went nearer to Mr. St. John. Whether it was the silent beauty of the sunshine, the music of the winds amongst the trees, whether the peaceful quiet happiness of the scene touched her—who knows?

She went to him and took the chair that was nearest to him. She laid one hand on his, and if the sky had fallen above his head Eric could not have been more surprised.

"Eric," she said slowly, "do you know that you are not quite so pleased to see me as I thought you would be?

He suffered horribly for one minute. Common courtesy—the tie between them—urged him to say that he was happy; but his sense of truth interfered, in fact, no one could be less happy or delighted than he. Lady May did not notice his embarassment, but went on,—

"I know that we are both far too sensible for lover's raptures, but I have been away so long and we are to be married next year, I thought you would have something to say to me."

"I am very pleased to see you," he replied; but her words sounded in his ear like knell of doom. Married next year! Oh, Bonnie Doon—Bonnie Doon! where were you?

"You must get better quickly, Eric," she said. "I do not like to see you with this thin pale face. You are one of those men who require a wife; in fact, must have one to keep you in order. When I have to take care of you I shall not allow you to overwork yourself."

She had never been so gracious or so kind. Why does he not look at her with laughing eyes as he would have done last year and answer her? Where is the sunshine gone from his face? He looks cold, pained, abstracted, and Lady May is determined to rouse him and make him more cheerful. Is it latent jealousy of the beautiful girl, or is it newly found affection for himself?—Is it that we value the unattainable, or was it a blending of all these motives that made her unlike herself, more demonstrative, more kind?

"If I had known," she continued, "that you were really ill—so ill as this, I should have come home before. Why did you not tell me, Eric?"

"I did not think of it. I have been getting better all the time. Besides, I have been well nursed, and it would have been useless to have spoiled your holiday."

"My holiday was of very little consequence compared with you," she said; and after that there was silence for some minutes.

In his heart he was crying "Bonnie Doon, Bonnie Doon;" in his heart he was wondering what he should do—why all the severe happiness of the morning had turned to sudden pain. He was wondering if he should look at her straight in the face and tell her that he had learned to love someone else during her absence, and that marriage between them never could be. But one cannot break ties that bind so abruptly, and he had not decided whether he should sever them or not; his mind and brain were in a whirl.

"I hope," continued Lady May, with what she intended to be the greatest possible affection—"I hope now that I am with you—you will continue to improve."

So ignorant was she of the fact that she was the cause of his pain.

"I think," she continued, "that I shall persuade you to go back to town with us. It seems to me that you have gained as much as you can gain here."

But there was no response in Eric's face.

"You will find yourself very comfortable at Lady Gerton's," she said, "and then you could go to Grange Court. You are only neglected here."

Here, where he had found Bonnie Doon. How little she knew.

"I think," he said slowly, "that I should like to remain at least some days longer."

"It is quite needless," said his fiance. "You are doing no good here. What is the use of staying here?"

He wondered to himself what she would say if she knew why he wished to stay. It would most surely then be a bad day's work for him, and for Bonnie Doon.

Suddenly her face darkened, and the kindness died out of it; it grew cold, hard, and firm.

"Unless, of course," she added, "you have any attraction here—any claim of which I do not know—any real reason why you wish to remain—of course, in that case, I—I have no more to say."

His thoughts flew to Bonnie Doon; he must shield her; whatever happened in the future,—which was all dark to him,—he must shield her now; he must not let these fine ladies know of the sweet love passages between them; he must shield Bonnie Doon. He might return in a short time, but it seemed inevitable that he should go now, lest she should suspect, and at present he had decided nothing. Then a man must be terribly strong-minded to be able to resist the persistent persuasions of a woman.

THE SNOW PLANT.

Professor Peck has returned from the mountains in Plumas County, bringing with him several specimens of the snow plant. They were obtained at an altitude of 7,000 feet, and on the snow line. The plants are about two feet in height from the base of the bulb to the top of the flowering spike. The bulb resembles a fine apple about the size of a man's fist, from the top of which a scarlet flowering column springs, the scarlet-colored leaves investing between the small cup-shaped flowers. The plants were packed in ice for transportation, as they can be preserved only in a cold moist temperature.

BIG TREES.

Sonoma County, California, boasts of some big trees. One redwood tree furnished all the lumber for the Baptist church in Santa Rosa, one of the largest church edifices in the county. The interior of the building is finished in wood, there being no plastered walls. Sixty thousand shingles were made from the tree after enough was taken for the church. Another redwood tree, cut near Murphy's Mill, about ten years ago, furnished shingles that required the constant and entire labor of two industrious men for two years before the tree was used up.

A Remarkable Escape.

Mrs. Mary A. Dailey, of Tunkhannock Pa., was afflicted for six years with Asthma and Bronchitis, during which time the best physicians could give me relief. Her life was despaired of, until in last October the proprietor a Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery when immediate relief was felt, and by continuing its use for a short time she was completely cured gaining in flesh 60 lbs. in a few months. WORLDLY WEALTH OF THE CHURCH.

At the conclusion of the conference of the Union Methodist Church at Toronto, it was stated in the pastoral address, that, "as a reason why Methodists should feel a pride in the united church, attention is called to the fact that in this country, with a population of less than 5,000,000, its adherents number 850,000; its membership 170,000; its ministers 2,000; its edifices 3,195; its parsonages 377; and the total value of its property between $9,000,000 and $10,000,000.

A CAT KILLED BY A MOUSE.

A cat had caught a mouse on a lawn and let it go again, in her cruel way, in order to play with it, when the mouse, inspired by despair, and seeing only one hole possible to escape into, namely, the round, red throat of the cat, very visible [illegible], took a bold spring into her jaws, just escaping between her teeth, and struggled and stuffed himself into her throat, with the result that the cat was suffocated.

AT LEAST NOT RIGHT AWAY.

A summer soiree in a suburb of Paris. Monsieur and Madame have lingered long in the garden after dinner. The warm air, the fragrant breeze, the solitude, all tend to a gush of sentiment.

"Tell me, sweetheart, if I should die, would you marry again?"

"Oh!" answers madame, in a tone of reproach; "of course not; at least not right away."

A MUCH NEEDED SOCIETY.

An Illinois man writes: "I have been poor all my life because my parents wasted their money for tea, coffee and tobacco, animal food and condiments, destroying their health and mine, and then paying doctors' bills to get cured again." One of the needs of this country is a society for the reformation of parents.

AN UNSUCCESSFUL APPEAL.

"Will you plase give a poor widdy a penny?" she begged of a pickpocket who had just relieved a gentleman of his purse.

"Indeed I would, my poor woman," he replied with real sympathy, "but I haven't a penny in the world that I can call my own."

What a comfort to be able to gratify one's appetite once more without pain, after long suffering from Dyspepsia! Victims of indigestion wise enough to accept the general verdict in favor of Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyspeptic Cure as true and use the article, can enjoy the welcome relief. Obstinate Dyspepsia, Consumption and Biliousness, invariably yield to its potent regulating action.

"Your friend will find this neighborhood very lively in the evenings, even if it does look a little lonely in the daytime," said the real estate agent. "The people in the block are all very musical; all have pianos and organs, and the family across the street play on five different instruments." "Ah, indeed!" was the reply. "That will just suit, for my friend is as deaf as a post."

She—"Only give up smoking for one year, and I have no doubt you will never touch tobacco again." He—"Well, I don't know. I didn't smoke for fifteen years, and then I began and enjoyed it hugely." She—"For fifteen years? You must have been very young when you began?" "I was fifteen."

Shall we let the child die?

A heart-touched political economist looking at a pale and puny child feebly grasping as it lies upon a pillow, says that the child might as well die. See the poor little one pick up strength. He revives. He will live. Hosts of other children have been brought almost from death to healthy life by The Shaker Blood Syrup. Ormond & Walsh sells it.

AN EGG TO TWENTY MEN.

Twenty hungry men, says the New York Sun, recently sat down to a meal composed of a single egg. It was an ostrich egg. For a whole hour it was boiled, and though there were some misgivings as to its being cooked the shell was broken, for curiosity could no longer be restrained, and a three-pound hard-boiled egg laid upon the plate. Set aside from its size there was nothing peculiar about it. It had the white and bluish tinge of duck eggs, and the yelk was of the usual color. It tasted as it looked—like a duck egg—and had no flavor peculiar to itself. But it was immense! As it takes 28 hen eggs to equal in weight the ostrich egg which was cooked, it is evident that the host knew what he was about in cooking only one. There was enough and to spare.

Dr. Wheeler's Compound Elixir of Phosphates and Calsaya.

SANDY CREEK, August 31st, 1882

The Compound Elixir of Phosphates and Calsaya prepared by you I have been for two years using largely in my practice, and I assure you that in my judgment there is no preparation of its kind that can compare with it where it is applicable. With feeble, anæmic women, of whom we have so many, and in cases convalescing from prostrating diseases, I should hardly know how to get along without it. In Dyspepsia it acts like a charm—in fact in any of the long list of exhaustive diseases it is THE remedy.

I am, yours truely,

AN ENORMOUS STATUE.

According to Mr. W. F. Petrie's report, the red granite statue of Rameses II. (the oppressor of the Israelites), at Zoan, whose broken parts he discovered, was the grandest of all the colossi of Egypt of which we have knowledge. He is now able to estimate its original size upon a basis of positive data. He finds that the statue was of stupendous dimensions. The figure alone would weigh 700 tons, to which the accessories would add as much more. It is the tallest and heaviest statue known. In order to stand in the nave of Westminster Abbey, which is 102 feet high, the pedestal would have to be sawn off.

Do you feel blue and dispondent? Do pains rack and tear away at nerve and muscle, and have you been disappointed in finding a remedy that will afford certain and speedy relief. If so, go to any drug store and buy a sample bottle of Polson's Nerviline. Polson's Nerviline never fails to relieve neuralgia, cramps, headache, rheumatism, and all internal or external pains. J. B. Polson's Nerviline is sold in sample bottles at 10 cents; large size 25 cents—by all druggists and country dealers everywhere. Try a ten cent bottle.

"I lent my best girl to Jones yesterday," said Brown to his friend. "Lent your girl? What do you mean?" asked the latter. "Well, you see, Jones' girl had gone a visiting, and he wanted some one to go driving with him, and so I lent him mine." "What church does your girl belong to, Brown?" inquired the friend. "The Episcopal; but why do you ask?" "Great heavens, man! Get her back as soon as possible. She may consider it her duty to keep lent."

Church Changes.

Next Sunday the Bible Christian Church, Murray street, ceases to become a church, in one sense. The congregation has been divided between the George street and the Charlotte street Methodist Churches, and the place will witness their worship no more. No decision has, pending the expiry of time of action fixed by the Act of incorporation, been arrived at as to the use that will be made of the building.

Strawberry Festival.

A decidedly pleasant strawberry festival was held in the grounds of the George Street Methodist Church on Friday evening last. There was a large attendance, which thoroughly enjoyed the abundant and delicious refreshments provided by the ladies of the congregation. The Fire Brigade Band was in attendance, and, as usual, contributed greatly to the enjoyment of the occasion. The net cash proceeds were in the neighborhood of $50.

A Pleasant Gathering.

On Thursday evening Mr. and Mrs. John Ludgate, of Ashburnham, celebrated the twenty-ninth anniversary of their wedding day, by entertaining a party of about thirty guests at their pleasant residence. A delightful evening was passed in social chat and reviving recollections of the past. We beg to add to those of their guests of Thursday evening, our own congratulations, and hope that both may be long spared to gather around them on each recurrence of the marital anniversary, their many friends.

Worth Knowing.

While prices are generally high all over the country it is refreshing to learn that at least one store in Peterborough has placed prices to suit the times. At China Hall you can buy a handsome glass set, 6 pieces, for 35 cents, a handsome butterdish for 10cts., a large complete for 25cts., six chimneys for 25cts., white tea set, 44 pieces for $2.00; colored tea set, 44 pieces, $2.50; chamber sets from $1.00 up; half dozen nice goblets for 30cts.; handsome China tea sets from $4.50; best quality cruets only only $2.50; knives, forks and spoons lower than ever. Do not fail to visit "China Hall," the palace store of Peterborough. 26-tf

Entrance Examinations.

On Thursday and Friday last the examinations of candidates for admission to the Peterborough Collegiate Institute were held at the Union School buildings. Mr. James Stretton, inspector of public schools for Peterborough, conducted the examinations, assisted by Mr. O'Connor head-master of the Institute and Mr. John Campbell Classical master. There were ninety-two candidates, of these fifty-two were girls and the balance boys. The candidates, the majority of which was from the town schools, were supplied as follows: Union school, 55, Convent, 9, Smith township, 12, Cavan 4, Otonabee, 2, North Monaghan, 2, South Monaghan, 3, Douro, 1, Dummer, 1, Ennismore, 3, total 92.

The Lacrosse Club's Outing.

On Tuesday morning the first team of the Lacrosse Club started by Grand Junction train for Brockville to play for the splendid cup and set of medals offered by the committee of the Oddfellows' International Demonstration, held there this week. The team was composed of the following men, including spare man: —Messrs. Jos. Giroux, Percy Myles, R. H. Fortye, J. Howden, R. Kelly, M. Tierney, W. J. Scott, James Sheehey, Wm. Rudkins, C. Rutherford, Geo. Giroux, M. Halpin and A. Yelland; James Coughlin, field captain. This is a pretty safe team to leave the task they have undertaken in the hands of. The President of the club, Mr. H. LeBrun, of course, also accompanies the the team, besides a large number of the friends and admirers of the boys, in all about fifty.

at the Auction Mart, opposite the Bridge office. A large consignment of Clothing, Men's and Boys Suits, with instructions to sell by private sale at half price. Call and see them.

Accident.

On Thursday afternoon last, a little daughter of Mr. — Hayes, Rubidge street, fell down the stairs at home and suffered a fracture of the collar bone. Dr. Pidgeon supplied the necessary surgical attention.

Home from the Wars.

The local members of the Durham Field Battery arrived home on Saturday last, covered with glory and freckles. They came out first, by six or eight seconds, in the gun dismounting competition, beating the whole brigade.

Money.

Mr. John A Bennett, of Otonabee, is prepared to make loans on real estate and to purchase mortgages. Loans will be made at the lowest rates of interest, payable when the borrower deems the most convenient time, the principal, being payable at such times as may be agreed upon. Expenses are very light. 12-tf

A Fine Lot of Cattle.

On Saturday morning Mr. Doherty weighed on his new market scales eighty head of cattle. The stock was purchased from Mr. Joseph Redmond, Otonabee, by Mr. James Atkins, for shipment to the old country. The lot averaged in weight about 1,200 lbs., and was worth over $6,000. Mr. Redmond has sixty more fine head of stock ready for the market. Mr. Atkins' cattle were shipped from here on Saturday.

Electric Light.

An electric lamp has been put in position over the platform on the western side of the station. It is hung rather low (beneath the bracket that supports the signal lamp) to allow the greatest benefit from the light. It will, however, be a great advantage to arrivals and departures by all night trains, especially the public who expect friends to arrive by evening trains. The G.T.R. seem to be alive to the interests of the public.

Accident.

Mr. Abram Dormer, an old resident of Ashburnham, met with a painful accident on Thursday last. He fell down the stairs leading to the stables (which are partially underground) of Mrs. Col. Haultain, Brock street, and badly cut one side of his face and head and bruised one arm. The injuries, which are more serious in a man of Mr. Dormer's advanced age (82 years), were looked after by Dr. McCrea, and the patient is progressing favorably.

A Wide Awake Newspaper.

Our village contemporary, the Peterborough EXAMINER, comes to hand considerably enlarged and is now the largest sheet in the district. The merchants of this lively and progressive country village evidently know the value of printers' ink, and we congratulate them on having such a valuable advertising medium as THE EXAMINER. A wide awake newspaper is the best advertising agent in existence.—Bowmanville Statesman.

Foresters' Excursion.

At the regular meeting of Court Peterborough C.O.F., on Friday night, it was decided to make the annual excursion to, and hold the annual pic-nic at, Sturgeon Point, near Lindsay, on Thursday, July 24th. Fuller particulars respecting the excursion will be published in due course. The Canadian order is in a most flourishing condition here. Court Peterborough has grown so much (the membership now numbering 110) that a better hall has to be provided. On Friday night the matter was decided upon, and subscription lists opened for funds to furnish a new hall. Early on Saturday over $200 had been secured.

Canoeing Cruise.

The Lindsay Post thus refers to a canoe cruise in which two Peterborough gentlemen were concerned: "A canoe party numbering Messrs. W. Flavelle, F. H. Dobbin and Master A. F. Barr, of Lindsay, Joseph Flavelle and Rev. Mr. Manning of Peterborough and Mr. R. Chambers of Rochester, N. Y., made the trip this week from Lindsay to Peterborough, via the lakes and Otonabee river. As navigation is pretty well interfered with by logs and timber the spectacle of the above eminent aquatists hauling their traps over "the drive" under a hot sun is one that the stay-at-home citizen might contemplate with calmness and commiseration."

Baseball Match.

A baseball match, between the following nines of Peterborough and Silver Star clubs took place on the Ashburnham grounds on Monday. Peterboroughs—W. Watson, Captain, H. Dunn, C. Batherford, W. McAuliffe, E. Rogers. W. Pidgeon, F. Billings, F. Larone and W. Welsh. Silver Stars—W. Dayman, Captain, W. Cushen, J. Callaghan, J. E. Hawkins, A. Soney, T. Sanderson, J. J. Lynch, A. F. Reid and W. Latain. The Stars won by an innings and nine rans as will be seen by the following score:

Silver Stars—6, 4, 0, 1, 4, 4, 6, 9	38.
Peterboroughs—0, 0, 4, 3, 3, 0, 4, 1, 2,	17.

Mr. James Coughlin acted as umpire. Since the match, several of the Peterboroughs, including the catcher, have seceded and joined the Silver Stars.

Another Brakeman Bruised.

On Friday morning, Mr. William Pethick, whose home is Port Hope, a brakeman on the Midland Toronto mixed, was painfully jammed and bruised between two cars. He was making a coupling in the station yard here, on a rather sharp curve which caused the two ends of the meeting cars to come so close as to violently square and bruise the brakeman about the lower part of the chest. He did not at first appear to be much injured, making one shunt afterwards, but he grew worse and had to be helped to his boarding house, Mrs. Stutt's, Charlotte street. He is however recovering under the care of Dr. King. He had a narrow escape, an inch or two less space and his chest would have been fatally crushed.

A Splendid Chance.

It will be seen by an advertisement in another column that Mr. D. W Dumble offers for sale a number of Building Lots in various parts of the town on ten years credit. No money down, interest only to be paid for first five years, and thereafter yearly instalments with the right to pay at any time as may suit the convenience of the purchaser. This offer enables a poor man to use his money in erecting a building, and so he gets rid of rent, and secures a home for himself. Building will be cheap this year and no doubt many will take advantage of this very liberal offer. Besides lots in town, Mr. Dumble offers a number of lots in Ashburnham, and several park lots on the same terms. Call at his office and see plans, &c.

Toronto Industrial Exhibition.

The immense success that has hitherto marked the exhibitions of the Toronto Industrial Exhibition Association, and the experience thereby gained, are a guarantee that the forthcoming exhibition, more particularly referred to in our advertising columns, will be a magnificent exposition of the agricultural and industrial resources and wealth of Ontario. Every year thousands have crowded the city in September, and each year an increasing number, for the directors, in addition to preparing a fine programme, have been scrupulously exact in carrying it out, so that they have won public confidence, and it is a generally received opinion that Toronto's Industrial Exhibitions are amongst Toronto's permanent institutions, to visit which is an annual privilege and pleasure.

Half Mile Heats.

Mr. Ed. Brown is stake-holder for $250 a side for the half mile heats to be run on the Driving Park, here, on Sept., 9th.

Time Table.

The public time card of the O & Q. Railway will be issued on the 15th, for the district between Havelock and Toronto.

The People Say.

The best bargains ever given in Sideboards, Centre Tables, Book Cases, and Bed room Sets, are now being had at the Skating Rink, Dickeson' Race. 26-tf Cup Competition.

The opening contest for the beautiful silver cups offered by Messrs. Archie Moffat and Geo. Stevenson will take place on Little Lake course on Monday or Tuesday evening.

Real Estate Sale.

Mr. W. A. Morrow, last week sold his farm of 116 acres at Fairmount, Cavan, advertised in THE EXAMINER, (an excellent medium, therefore) to Mr. Samuel Sargent of Otonabee, for the sum of $7,000.

Life, Love and Death.

During the month of June there were registered with the town clerk, 16 births, seven marriages and five deaths. The record for the half year of 1884 was births 89, 7 more than the corresponding six months of the previous year, marriages 46, 10 more than the previous year and deaths 63, 9 more than the first six months of 1883.

Again Burned Out.

We regret to notice that Messrs. Meharry & Lang of Port Perry, former residents of Peterborough, are among the sufferers by the recent fire that almost swept the village as reported in another column, out of existence. They are doubly unfortunate. They were also burned out by the big fire last fall which then partially destroyed the village.

Masonic Grand Lodge.

This week the following gentlemen went to Toronto to attend the meeting of the Masonic Grand Lodge of Canada the Grand Chapter and the grand Priory which met in that city on Wednesday: Messrs John E. Belcher, W. M. and Robert E. Wood representing Corinthian Lodge No. 101; B. Shortly W., M., Peterborough Lodge No. 155; Geo Cochrane, W. M., Clementi Lodge No. 313, Lakefield; James McNeil, W. M. Keene Lodge, No. 374; Dr. Fraser, P. Z. Walter Paterson Z., R. H. Green J. and Harry Winch P. Z. as representatives of Corinthian R. A. Chapter, No. 36, Rev. V. Clementi, R. A. C. D. McDonald, and R. H. D. Hall, representing Moore Preceptory.

Encouraging.

There is something eminently encouraging in the fact that the Water Works company is putting water into the present post office building, Brock street. It shows that the public will not be compelled to find their way to the new post office "for several years to come." Persons prone to grumble assert that the water works are trying to throw cold water on the post office scheme. Be that as it may, one can confidently predict that the new post office will come about the time the Trent Valley canal is finished. Then we can follow Toronto's example and celebrate the semi-centennial of Peterborough's incorporation as a city, and the opening of the canal and the post office in one grand, combined blow-out.

A Rattling Runaway.

On Friday morning Mr. Wm. Mann of Bridgenorth, came into town and left his team standing untied in front of Paterson & Son's Tannery, attached to his farm wagon in which was tied a fat pig weighing about three hundred pounds. The horses became frightened and ran away. They struck a good pace but the pig kept his feet. As the flying team turned from Alymer street into Simcoe, the tail board of the loose box, fell out and piggy was thrown. He hung on however till the team reached Queen street where they turned too suddenly and flung the pig, box, boards and all, abroad. The coupling broke and the team ran to Hunter street with the front wheels. On turning into Allen's stable yard, this fragment of wagon struck a lamp post and was demolished, and the horses running into the stable yard were caught; they were rather badly cut about the hind legs. The pig received a contusion on the nose which bled freely, and severe internal injuries.

An Important Sporting Event.

A match trot has been arranged for $100 a side between Ed. Brown's, "Fanny B" and McGregor's (Norwood) bay mare. The date has been fixed for Friday August first and at the new driving park in the south part of the town. A number of other races are being arranged for the occasion, which will be a sort of informal opening of the park. The contractor is getting on well with the grading of the track, the recent rain greatly facilitating his work. The contract for the fence will soon be made; the track will be finished and the grounds enclosed by the first trot, August first. The Agricultural society don't seem inclined, or if they favor the project, are very slow in co-operating with the committee of the Driving Park Association, in coming to some arrangement whereby the driving park may also be used in common. If this were done the combined resources of the organizations, would effect desirable improvements which neither could bring about separately. The Driving Park association have become tired of waiting and are going on to finish the grounds on their own "hook."

Aquatic Illumination.

On Thursday evening the boating club made a most successful introduction of a regular weekly spectacular entertainment. This is a parade of illuminated canoes. On Thursday evening over fifty canoes assembled on Little Lake each provided with one or two Chinese lanterns. The flotilla formed in line under the command of President Edwards, and Col. Rogers, rear Commodore of the American Canoe Association, and performed a series of manœuvres which were well done and had a splendid effect. At last the canoes "formed a square" in the middle of the lake and a number of songs in which the gentlemen and ladies (who were largely represented) acquitted themselves admirably well. So great was the success of this first illuminated parade that it will be repeated on Thursday evenings hereafter on a grander scale. The "City Band" will be stationed on the shore to add the charm of music to the scene. During the evening a grand display of fireworks will be made. a few members of the club having united to furnish this pyrotechnic addition to the entertainment. A large number of spectators will be on Burnham's Pointto see the grandest aquatic parade ever held in the district.

St. Andrew's Church.

The Rev. Jas. Cleland, of Port Hope, will preach in St. Andrew's church, next Sunday, morning and evening.

Piano Tuning.

Geo. Gumpricht, tuner for Messrs. Mason & Risch, Toronto, is in Town for a few days. Orders left at T. Mossop's tinshop, or Messrs. Taylor & Macdonald's Drug Store, will be promptly attended to.

Teacher's Examinations.

The examination of candidates for intermediate and third class certificates began on Monday, and those for second class certificates on Wednesday. For the intermediate there were 9 candidates, for third class, 29—27 from town—for second class, 4.

Confirmation Services.

His Lordship, the Bishop of the Diocese of Toronto, administered the rite of confirmation to a large number of candidates on Tuesday evening, at St John's Church. An exceedingly appropriate address was delivered by his Lordship. There was a large congregation, and choir of 28 voices furnished excellent music.

A Dismal Defeat.

A telegram received from Brockville states that the home Lacrosse club was defeated by the Metropolitans of Ottawa, in three straight games, lasting 3, 7 and 3 minutes respectively. We are sorry to have to state that there is no doubt of the truth of the report. The team plays the Oakas of Belleville on their return to-day (Thursday).

A New Convenience.

Peterborough travellers, outward bound, will be interested in knowing that arrangements have been made for the fast express train going west to stop at Port Hope every morning, so that passengers from Lindsay, Peterborough and Millbrook arriving by the nine o'clock train can make connections, both east and west.

New Business.

Mr. Hugh Ross, recently with H. LeBrun as cutter, has leased the shop next north of Mr. Leon's fur store George street, and will on the first of September open out with a full and new stock of tweeds, broadcloths, gent's furnishings, etc. Mr. Ross while in Peterborough before, worked up a good reputation as a cutter and we have no doubt that his well known sartorial skill, with a fine new stock, will secure him a liberal share of the public patronage.

Insane Mendacity.

The editor asserts that "Mr. John Goodliffe, of Omemee, brought to the Herald office a large strawberry, grown in his garden, which measured four and a half inches in circumference. It was a 'daisy'." Two lines above the editor says it was a strawberry; but that is natural; we can't expect a Tory editor to stick to the truth consistently the length of a line. If the excuse is made that "daisy" is slang, the example of the corrupting influence of Noil Billingsgate may fairly be pleaded in extenuation.

Building Accident.

On Wednesday afternoon of last week Mr. Wm. Robinson, a tinsmith working with Mr. D. Breese on the new Presbyterian church building met with a painful accident. He was helping Mr. Breese fit a mitre joint on one of the small gables on the eastern side of the new part. The scaffold was too low and it had been heightened by planks laid across a couple of saw horses and on these a small box had been placed. In stepping down off the box the sudden change from looking up fixedly, to looking down made him dizzy and he fell on his side on the edge of the scaffold and rolled off. As he fell he clutched the scaffold pole with one hand, but it was too large for a firm grasp and he fell, striking on a second pole, which threw him in towards the building; he struck on his head and shoulders lacerating his face badly and inflicting body bruises. In his fall of 23 feet he narrowly missed falling on a pile of rough stones which would probably have killed him outright. Mr. Robinson, who is a young married man was taken to his home Alymer street and his injuries attended to.

PERSONAL.

Mrs. Thomas Darcy has gone to Rochester for a few weeks' visit.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. A. Cox spent last Sunday in Belleville.

Rev. Mr. Shaw and family removed to Orillia on Thursday.

Messrs. J. R. Dundas, M.P., and John McLennan, of Lindsay, were in town last Monday.

Rev. W. H. Jamieson, of Perrytown, preached in St. Andrew's Church on Sunday last, at both morning and evening services.

His Lordship Bishop Jamot, and Dr. O'Sullivan, have left for Port Arthur, the former making an episcopal visit, and the latter seeking pleasure.

Rev. J. W. Butcher, pastor of the Ashburnham B. C. Church, who, however, remains in town as superannuate, preached his valedictory sermon on Sunday last.

Mr. JOHN MACKAY, of Cressmore, Chief Inspector for Simcoe under the McCarthy Act, is spending a brief vacation in the vicinity of Peterboro'.

The Orillia Packet thus welcomes Rev. J. Shaw to the pasturate of the Methodist Church Orillia. "The Rev. John Shaw is one of the most worthy and admirable ministers of the Methodist Church, and has occupied places of honour and importance. Orillia is to be congratulated on his advent. He will preach his first sermons as pastor of Orillia Methodist Church on Sunday next."

Rev. Mr. Tovell,—pronounced To-vell—late of the Berkley Street Methodist Church, Toronto, will assume the pastorate of the George Street Methodist Church next Sunday, holding his first service and preaching his first sermon. He comes highly recommended as an eloquent preacher and a faithful, zealous minister. The George street congregation will hold a reception to-night (Thursday) at the parsonage, to welcome him to his new home and duties.

Rev. J. W. Joliffe, who removes this year to Bloomfield, Prince Edward county, preached his farewell sermon it Murray Street Church on Sunday. There was a peculiar significance in Rev. Mr. Joliffe's leave-taking. In addition to the severance of personal ties, the occasion marked the termination of the separate and distinct existence of the congregation, now merged into the sea of common Methodism. Rev. Mr. Joliffe is a man of simple and unaffected piety, most zealous and faithful in his office. He takes with him the universal respect and esteem of all who knew him.

Rev. Mr. Shaw preached his valedictory sermons in the George street and Charlotte street Methodist Churches last Sunday morning and evening respectively. In the evening the rev. gentleman preached from Acts, Chap. xx., 32. In the course of his remarks he referred in feeling terms to the friendly relations that had uniformly marked his relations with his people, both as a congregation and in their business capacity. He counselled mutual charity and forbearance between the people that were, under the union, assuming new relations. He gave excellent advice generally respecting the different interests of the church, and spoke with deep feeling of the cordial nature of the relations between him and Rev. Mr. Manning during the past two years. There is very general regret at Mr. Shaw's departure from town. As a minister he is a plain, earnest, practical preacher, greatly beloved and respected, not only by his flock but by the public generally. He is a staunch temperance advocate, and foremost in every good and moral work. He has occupied, and still occupies, a prominent place in the church, and the Orillia congregation are to be congratulated on the Conference having sent them so estimable a minister.

Dr. Wild's Sermon

IN ANSWER TO THE

Pope's Anti-Masonic Encyclical, Preached in Bond Street Church, Toronto.

In compliance with the request of the Masonic fraternity we re-publish the following verbatim report of Dr. Wild's sermon on the above subject:

"Every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is."—I. CORINTHIANS, 3RD CHAP., 13TH VERSE.

Pope Leo, at present the chief officer of the Roman Catholic Church, has recently issued an encyclical on Freemasonry, in other words, he has written a letter against Masonry and Freemasons, and by his authority he has ordered the same to be read publicly before all Roman Catholic congregations for their instruction and to their warning. The letter being a public one, it gives me the privilege, without doing any violation to any one, to criticise the same. The language used in it is not moderate nor Christian, and very far from being truthful. It is, however, defaming and malicious, and for this reason I will try and answer it, for I am a Freemason myself, hence I shall know whereof I speak. That I may do so agreeably with the usual custom of sermonising I have chosen the words that I have cited as my text. In order to understand these words you will want just to remind yourselves, that quite frequently in Scripture Egyptian usages and proverbs are introduced for the purpose of illustrating spiritual ideas. You will find for instance in Ecclesiastes 11th chap. and 1st verse this statement: "Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shall find it after many days." This refers of course to the land of Egypt, the land of which it is said in Zechariah, "There is no rain." Providence has kindly offset this deficiency by the annual rising of what is called the river Nile, which overflows the land. Indeed, it is just overflowing it now, so that it looks like a vast sea dotted with little islands. Towards November this water will very largely subside, and having subsided each man will take his rice bag and go forth and sow his seed. Rice is their staple food, like our wheat, and is called their bread. Before the waters are all quite subsided he throws this bread upon the waters and in a few days there appears a green blade, and in a very few weeks there is a harvest of rice, and the bread that he threw upon the waters is returned to him manifold. That is taken from an Egyptian custom. My text also will require us to go to Egypt for its exposition, and in doing so you will want to remind yourself that Egypt was a country noted for symbolisms and for mysteries. They had among their various mysteries and orders what is called the Eleusinian Prudentes, or the Secret Order of the Prudents. The Greek Eleusinian, or sacred and secret rites of Ceres were simply copied from this Egyptian custom. A man learned in all the knowledge and lore of the Egyptians, as it is stated Moses was, perhaps must know more than we are aware of. I will explain as best I can, having reference to this order, for no man can possibly understand these verses of Paul unless he has a knowledge of that Masonry called the Eleusinian Prudentes; not a practical knowledge, but a knowledge that has come down to us from the pages of history. You will imagine in your mind a large hall with ground flour, that is, sanded floor, level and clean. You wish to be introduced into this order of the Prudentes, and the Master sends you into this hall to develop three features of your character, and to ascertain if you have them, and if you have them the degree of them. The first one course will be your prudence. This will be manifest in the foundation that you will select for what you are going to construct. Some doubtless would go in and take the nearest place to the door and begin to construct their work, others might select some other part, and some would be very careful to dig down a little to see if they would have a good foundation for what they were going to construct, and mind you their prudence will be tested by the way they will begin to construct. The article, whatever it may be that they construct, will evince or give evidence of their skill because it will be a work of their own production. The Master can come in and examine it and tell whether the candidate is sufficient to belong to the order or not. He could easily discern his charity or benevolence by the the material he would construct a thing of, for he can, as Paul says, build it of gold, silver or brass, or wood, or hay, or stubble, That is, he might make some fine straw work or some work out of stubble, or any of the materials mentioned. He might see a wealthy man constructing a thing out of straw and know that he was not of a very benevolent turn of mind. By this very simple process they would be able to detect the disposition of the candidate. Then there was a time when they would test all this work, for when it was declared finished every candidate's work had to be tested. Underlying this floor were numerous small fines. They were connected with a large furnace in which was a great fire, and a fan was set to work to blow this flame up these flues. They were thinly covered. It would blow the covering off, and jets of flames would shoot up all over, and if the man had not selected his foundation, but put his straw structure near one of these flues, it would take fire; thus you see every man's work would be tested at once. His prudence would be at stake if he had not been careful to dig down and find out whether he had a good foundation or not. Every man was commanded to stand by his work, and when the flames would come confusion would take hold of some; they would try to save their work, and so endanger their lives, but the Master drew them out and saved them as if by fire, for they are to be saved though their works perish. This is the order of the Prudents of the Egyptians. Read the text and context in this light, and you will clearly see Paul's meaning and reference.

Let us go now a little further, having given this exposition. In the Pope's letter he charges Masonry with teaching atheism, attacking the power of God, especially the Christian religion. He says Masons set law and authority at defiance, enforcing their vicious decrees by murder, also, that they bring the institution of marriage into contempt, corrupt the young in order to make them more tractable to the wicked tenets of Masonry. In short he says Masonry seeks to destroy the throne, the altar, and the public welfare. All will agree that these items constitute a very formidable charge, which, if true in any one case, would be a justifiable reason why I should cease to be a Mason, if it were possible, and indeed be a sufficient reason why Masonry should be put down by the laws of the land, and not be allowed to exist in this or any other country. But are these statements and charges true? It is worth our while asking this even if the Pope himself has made the charges. I say no; Pope Leo says YES. How shall we know the right in a matter of this kind? Not by a simple yes or no, I admit, but by an examination of the origin of the Institute and workings of Masonry. No man can take a fairer statement than that, and any man that wants less is not honest. I am aware that the Pope claims to be infallible, but against such a claim I enter a demurrer. He is no more infallible than I am, likely not as much, touching Free Masonry, for I have a practical knowledge of it, and he has not, so that what I say may be credited a great deal better than what Pope Leo says on this question for I have taken a number of degrees, and can therefore speak from knowledge and experience, while he can only speak from hearsay which is not always a safe channel of communication. It is wonderful what some men can assume, and it is equally as wonderful how so many people are willing to acknowledge these assumptions.

Some people wonder why there exists a devil, and why he has such power; It is just as curious to account for the existence of a pope. The devil is an anomaly among the angels, so is the pope of Rome in the 19th century among any Christian people who acknowledge that he is the vice-gerent of God. The same philosophy that can account for the existence of a pope can account for the existence of a devil, the one is just as reconcilable with the good intention and rule of Providence as the other. But they do exist. Just imagine the freemen of Britain, of the United States and Canada listening to the reading of this latest Romish encyclical, the views of an Italian in a strange land. Not that of a Cavour, heroic and noble, pleading for the freedom and unity of his country, not that of a Garibaldi, leading his followers forth to battle, for the liberty of the people, but a man of greater assumptions, but less merit than either, dictating to men of this world and warning them, and threatening them if they have aught to do with Masonry, as if they were little children who did not know how to take care of themselves until informed through the Vatican at Rome. Suppose a stranger from a foriegn land should happen to wander into one of the Catholic churches in England while this letter was being read, would he not be tempted to enquire if he really was in England, and if the men about him in the church were the freemen of which he had read and heard so much. As the priest read the dictates of an Italian to them, surely, Catholic or non-Catholic, such a letter must have been galling to an Englishman. Then, let said stranger visit the United States, in the 108th year of that country's independence, and hear read this same dictatorial correspondence, would he not be surprised, for he would have heard of real Yankee freemen, daring, bold and generous, who long ago flung defiance to all the outside world in the Munroe doctrine, telling them, saying, "Mind your own business, and we will mind ours." The stranger would be led to ask if the Munroe doctrine exempted Italians. If so, why, and if not so, how then came it to pass that the threatenings of a foreigner against one of their most honorable and flourishing institutions should be publicly announced? Is that agreeable to the Munroe doctrine, or is it not? Then let said stranger visit Canada, right here in Toronto, and attend service in St. Michael's Cathedral, and hear the same letter read; surely he would think it strange that the famous Italian assumed corrective jurisdiction in the colonies. I am sure he would have very little faith in the talk of independence of Canada, when he saw the people slavishly sitting and listening to the dictates of a foreigner as to what they should do or should not do; such men are not prepared for independence by a long way. No doubt he would see a slight blush in the faces of some of the freemen in the pews, and perhaps the noble Archbishop would blush a little himself, for he would know that it must reflect on him and his Curez; that Masonry should exist in his very midst and they not know it, or knowing it, be too cowardly to mention it. But that an Italian should have to remind them and to command to do what they should have done. How wise this Italian must be! How powerful, too, he must be! Monseigneur Capel, this aristocratic apostle of Leo, sent to convert the rich people of the United States, makes a wonderful statement that illustrates the supposed power of this man in one of his speeches in Chicago a short time ago. "As easily as a man pulls the trigger of a pistol, so could Leo empty all the schools of Catholics in the United States by a word." Well, sir, I doubt not that he could, and it is a pity that such a statement could be made by any probability in a broad, free country like that, it is a pity that we have men and women in these liberal countries that can be bound to a man like that. How easily the hierarchy of Rome can mistake toleration for right. A big Newfoundland dog bears a good deal of snarling at from the little curs on the street, because he is majestic and forbearing, but he knows when he has a mind he could snap them up and hurl them across the street, and so Protestantism and Liberty in Britain will bear many assaults and many privileges taken at its hand, but it always has a time of reckoning as has been frequently shown in history, and hurled back that people of their own place, and taught them the difference between toleration and right. The hierarchy have been simply tolerated and they do not know in Toronto, or anywhere else, the difference between toleration and right. We permit these things under a Protestant sovereign, in a Protestant country giving equal rights, equal freedom to all. I do not speak against the Catholic fraternity of members, I am speaking directly against the hierarchy. I do not speak against Christianity, I am speaking against Roman Catholicism, rightly named; it orginated in Rome, it centres in Rome, it is controlled by Rome. I do not believe as a Canadian in Roman Catholicism, or Roman Methodism, or Roman Congregationalism, I believe in Jesus Catholicism. They have got a name they do not know the meaning of; Catholicism is a universal word, but the very name of Rome limits it and shows us where it orginated. When the Methodists in the time of Sir John Colborne were desirous of including their brethern in the United States, the liberty of this country demanded that they should be seperate and be Canadians. So the Episcopalians have had to seperate from England and manage their own affairs. How then under the the sun do we permit an Italian, if we won't permit our brethern in the United States to be one with us, and jealous even of church connection with England, yet we permit that man to send messages into our land issuing his letter and directing to us what we do. I believe that they might justly be arrested and put in gaol. I would go bail to get them out rather than that they should suffer unjustly. There is no law that would give a guarantee to such a letter coming into our presence. I am not speaking as to the rightfulness of the letter simply, but as to the right of an Italian prince interfering with our lawfully recognized institutions or not. I never read a letter in all my life so misrepresenting. My honorable neighbor Archbishop Lynch last week wrote a very generous letter I will confess, a very beautiful letter, complaining of what he calls misrepresentations by the late Presbyterian General Assembly, stating that they misconceived with regard to the Catholic faith and he wishes to correct their errors. Does my honorable friend wish to correct errors? Does he assume to do so? Then by all means it is my privilege to correct errors in the letter of the chief officer at Rome.

The pope does not simply advise. We must permit men to advise, we do not assume to dictate them of this matter, but there is a great difference between advice and dictation, and advice and misrepresentation. In that letter he misrepresents, he ridicule and condemns an honorable institution, and an honorable band of men who belong thereto. This is my grievance. He might have said that he would wish his followers not to unite with any secret society, but he has no right to say we are malicious, thus we are dissimulate, that we are dangerous to public morality, and that we are disloyal. I throw it back to him and every man that holds with him, and would stand for my life that I am ten times more loyal than ever he was. There is no reason for Canadians to accept a letter like that, whether we are Masons or not, that makes but a small matter of difference; but for a man to come into my adopted country and make such a statement is not right. Men will be at me this week for taking up this subject in the house of God; they will be alarmed at this marriage when the very Bishop in his mitred garments from the altar, that has been consecrated—this has not in which I stand, according to name—read that very letter. I am not afraid of Archbishop Lynch or any other Bishop taking me up, because I can make statements that even they themselves must say are facts, every man whether he be Catholic or Protestant. I never exposed myself to be attacked by them in all the attacks that I have made upon that system since I came to Toronto. I am always wise enough to keep within bounds. I am not going to defame, to misrepresent, or to reflect. Now, I hold this, any man has the right to object to secret societies if he choose; there is nothing wrong in that, but the moment a man joins any one of them he shuts his own mouth. I have no objection to a man who says, "I do not like the Masons, I do not believe you are right." He is consistent. But if he belongs to another secret society he has no right to speak thus of mine. There are some secret societies in the Catholic church, the most dangerous on the face of this earth, as they have been. Talk of menacing public morality, or the throne of the empire. What society has upset thrones and produced wars and insurrections in the past? The Jesuits. I could stand here until six o'clock in the morning and repeat the papal intrigues, Jesuitical disloyalty that brought war upon our native land and all the civilized nations of the earth, so that people of Catholic nations have risen and expelled them from their country because they were dangerous. Why were they expelled from Venice in 1767? Why were they expelled from Holland in 1708? Why were they expelled from France in 1764? Why were they expelled from Spain in 1767? Why were they expelled from Russia in 1820? Why were they expelled from England in 1829? Why were they expelled from Germany in 1872? Why were they expelled from Italy in 1873? Since that from France again, and from China, from Japan, and from every civilized nation and race on the face of the earth, excepting the United States, and they will have to do so also and curb them before long. Now, I want to know why these countries have been so suspicious of these Jesuits. They either were right or they were wrong in expelling them. They doubtless were right; they are a dangerous class of people. A true Jesuit is my sworn enemy, and the truer he is to his oath the more dangerous he is, and he can assault a government, he can make any intrigue, and it can be called holy or righteous. A Mason the nearer he lives up to his oath, the better he will be. There is no man on the face of this earth can deny that; let him live up to it and he will be a good, honest man; but a Jesuit, the nearer he lives up to his oath he is a bad man, and the truer he is to it the worse he is; the truer a Mason is the better he is, that is the difference.

The charge of Atheism, Materialism, and attacking the power of God—I suppose we ought to know how these things go. I will quote to you from the book of the constitution of the Grand Lodge of Ancient and Accepted Masons in Canada, on page 7, the very beginning sentence: "A Mason is obliged by his tenure to obey the moral law, and, if he rightly understand the art, he will never be a stupid Atheist nor an irreligious libertine. He, of all men, should best understand that God seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh at the outward appearance, but God looketh to the heart." I ask Archbishop Lynch to produce anything from their Jesuits equal to that next week in the papers, as he is very fond of appearing there. I will quote to you now from page 89, a prayer at the initiation of a candidate: "We supplicate the continuance of thy aid, O merciful God, on behalf of ourselves and of him who kneels before Thee. May the work begun in Thy name be continued to Thy glory, and ever more established in us by obedience to Thy holy precepts." Can you do anything better than that; is there anything mystic or secret in that? I will also quote to you from page 80. You will permit me just to read it, although it is a little long. This is the Master's charge to the candidate when he is partially through: "As you have now passed through the ceremonies of your initiation, allow me to congratulate you on being admitted a member of our ancient and honorable society. Ancient, as having subsisted from time immemorable, and honorable, because by a natural tendency it conduces to make all those honorable who are strictly obedient to its precepts. Indeed, no institution can boast of a more solid foundation than that on which Freemasonry rests—the practice of social and moral virtue, and to so high an eminence has its credit been advanced that, in every age, monarchs themselves who have been promoters of the art have not thought it derogatory to their dignity to exchange the sceptre for the gavel; have patronised our mysteries and have joined our assemblies. As a Mason, I would first recommend to your most serious contemplation the volume of the sacred law, charging you to consider it the unerring standard of truth and justice, and to regulate your actions by the divine precepts which it contains. Therein you will be taught the important duty you owe to God, to your neighbor and yourself. To God, by never mentioning His name but with that awe and reverence which are due from the creature to his Creator, by imploring His aid in all your lawful undertakings, and by looking up to him in every emergency for comfort and support; to your neighbor, by acting with him on the square, by rendering to him every kind office which justice or mercy may require, by relieving his distresses, by soothing his afflictions, and by doing to him, as in similar cases, you would wish he should do unto you; and to yourself, by such a prudent and well regulated course of discipline as may best conduce to the preservation of your corporeal or mental faculties in their fullest energies, thereby enabling you to exert those talents wherewith God has blessed you, as zeal to His glory as the welfare of your fellow creatures. As a citizen of the world, I am zeal to submit you to be exemplary in the discharge of your civil duties by never propounding, or at all countenancing, any act that may have a tendency to subvert the peace and good order of society; by paying due obedience to the laws of any state which may for a time become the place of your residence or afford you its protections and above all, by never losing sight of the allegiance due to the sovereign of your native land; ever remembering that nature has implanted in your breast a second and indissoluble attachment to that country from which you derived your birth and infant nurture."

As an individual, I am further to recommend the practice of every domestic as well as public virtue. Let prudence direct you; temperance chasten you; fortitude support you; and justice be the guide of all your actions, and be especially careful to observe in their fullest extension, those truly Masonic ornaments, benevolence and charity. I appeal to your quotations, Archbishop Lynch, get up and tell me where there is a word in reference to politics, or to attack government, or to speak against the welfare, to attempt to overthrow it. I say that the books of Masonry are open to all the world, and all the Masonic lodges all through the world, and I speak what I know. I appeal to the world to produce any advice there to appear in the open pages of our records. If I am wrong I will thank a contradiction from some Catholic. He cannot do me, no abuse of Masonry, but gives me praise from their own works.

Masons do not set at nought the laws of the land, my dear friends. The Popes of Rome once were patrons of Masonry, and do you know this, that the whole of her institution is founded from, and after Masonry. The Pope is the great master and all the other officers have been finally wrought in Masonry. The Masons were the builders of the great cathedrals, and we know they were free and accepted, and whenever they were free from the bulls and edicts of the Pope, who up to the 9th century claimed assumed to legislate for a Mason, with the knowledge that Masons were supreme to him, and when the church became corrupt, and they could not control Masonry they turned around and cursed it. We are free from Roman Catholicising in Bond street church anyway. We believe in a God, in immortality, in charity and in freedom which we try to maintain ourselves and help others to maintain.

Now, my dear friends what I said, I said in all earnestness without any bitterness to any of my Catholic friends. I sympathise with those who have been taught and are willing to give their conscience in charge of any man. I do not want charge of your conscience, I want you all to take care of yourselves; my business is to teach you how to take charge of your conscience, that is what the pulpit is for. May the Lord God correct the Pope and make him a good Mason, or at least, a truth speaking man, in prayer, in speech, is the prayer of your humble servant. Amen.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH.

Celebrating the Eighth Anniversary.

We extract from that excellent little monthly publication, the Parish Church Work, published in the interests of St. Luke's, the following report of the celebration of the eighth anniversary:

"The eighth anniversary of St. Luke's church, Wednesday, July the 9th, was observed this year by a special service consisting of the administration of the Holy Rite of Confirmation by the Lord Bishop of the Diocese.

The service took place at 7:20 p. m. and was well attended, the church being filled with the candidates, their friends and members of the congregation.

The candidates assembled as usual in the school room and from there marched in procession to the church, while as they entered, the choir sang that suitable hymn, "Soldiers of Christ arise."

Evening prayer to the third Collect was said by the Incumbent, after which the confirmation service was proceeded with.

The Bishop then addressed the candidates with much affection and solemnity and in his remarks gave them some earnest advice. He drew attention to the double aspect of confirmation emphasizing particularly the benefits of the rite, and showing that to the faithful participant the great blessing was the gift of the Holy Ghost. He particularly impressed upon the candidates the need of private devotion, public worship and above all regular and stated attendance at Holy Communion that they might there seek and obtain a renewal of the Holy Spirit. He warned them that in these days they would meet with much temptation to forsake the good old paths and besought them to continue faithful and loyal to the church, into whose privileges they were now about to be admitted as full members. In conclusion he referred to the fact that this life was only preparatory for the future and that there might they expect the final confirmation in their actual possessions and inheritances promised to them as the children of Almighty God.

After the Bishop had put the usual solemn questions to the candidates, forty-six persons received the apostolic rite, twenty-five of whom were females and twenty-one males. This makes a total of 241 persons confirmed in the parish since its establishment, a period of 8 years. The service closed with the benediction by the Bishop, hymn 274 being sung as a Recessional.

We noticed with much thankfulness to God, the marked increase of seriousness and devotion in the behavior of the candidates. This encourages us to hope that they really were devoting themselves to the service of Christ at the time and that they actually obtained the blessing which they had come to seek, the gift of the Holy Spirit. May none of them receive the grace of God in vain.

The chancel was beautifully decorated with the choicest flowers, and the whole service was most impressive and interesting. The offertory was for the church renovation fund.

NO TIME LIKE THE PRESENT for seeking medical aid when what are foolishly called "minor ailments" manifest themselves. There are no "minor" ailments. Every symptom is the herald of a disease, every lapse from a state of health should be remedied at once, or disastrous consequences are likely to follow. Incipient dyspepsia, slight costiveness, a tendency to biliousness, should be promptly counteracted with Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and great Blood Purifier, and the system thus shielded from worse consequences.

C. R. Hall, Grayville, Ill., says: 'I have sold at retail, 156 bottles Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, guaranteeing every bottle. I must say I never sold a medicine in my life that gave such universal satisfaction. In my own case, with a badly ulcerated throat, after a physician penciling it for several days to no effect, the Eclectric Oil cured it thoroughly in twenty-four hours, and in threatened croup in my children this winter, it never failed to relieve almost immediately.'

Our New Watchmaker, Mr. Hughes, comes well recommended, and we are sure any work entrusted to him will be done in good style. Office lately occupied by Miss Burnham, Simcoe Steet. 18-tf

PETERBOROUGH, JULY 17, 1884.

Editorial Notes.

The returns of customs duty collected at Toronto for the fiscal year ending June 30th show a falling off of nearly half a million dollars compared with the collections of the previous year. The decrease in importations, though not as large as it should be, is a good sign showing that merchants have become alive to the evils of over-importation and are proceeding cautiously.

The Hudson Bay exploring expedition will leave Halifax on the 22nd of this month. Lieut. Gordon, R. N., Deputy Superintendent of the Canadian Meterological Service, is one of the party. The crew, with officials will number 55. The expedition will gather important information in reference to settling the practicability of the navigation of Hudson Bay and Straits.

The Tory journals won't admit a "reaction," but they must certainly concede that this state of affairs looks very like it: Since the first of June, elections have been held with the following results: Cumberland, Nova Scotia, Dominion, no change; Cumberland, Provincial, Reform gain; Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, Dominion, Tory majority reduced by 1,421; Megantic, Quebec, Dominion, Reform gain. A good enough record for a month.

The Mail makes the following "brilliant" attempt at wit:

"Notwithstanding their keenness for points against the Dominion Government the Grits have not yet charged Sir John Macdonald with the responsibility for the heat and for the absence of rain. A brilliant opportunity is thus lost."

The Mail is, however, "out" in its facts. Sir John has by implication, been repeatedly accused of making it hot for the pockets of the taxpayers, while we have a slight recollection that the Grits have occasionally alluded to the gallant "chieftain's" antipathy to water in any form. Many a true thing is spoken in jest.

In Dundas, the Banner says, they "have now and have had for many months past the very worst description of hard times. In the cotton mills the number of hands employed is now reduced to one-half. In the Canada Tool Works about one third the full complement of hands are employed, and these at reduced pay and on half-time." The remedy, a contemporary sarcastically remarks, is to increase the duties. If high taxation cured hard times in 1879, higher taxes ought to bring prosperity now or else the protectionist theory is at fault.

The Conservative journals claim for their party the possession of all the loyal sentiment of the country; that only Conservatives are in favour of Confederation. Yet Mr. Frank Jones, ex-M.P. for North Leeds and Greenville, a hereditary Tory of the deepest and darkest dye, in addressing the people of the Ottawa district, on political topics, asserts that Confederation has been a failure. Mr. Jones was in parliament in 1865 and supported the Confederation scheme, and thinks he should know. If he speaks the truth he should speak the whole truth and declare that if Confederation is a failure it is due to his party, which has, by its unholy disregard, of the rights of the provinces; its stirring up of sectional jealousy; its reckless squandering of the resources of the federated provinces, retarded the progress of the country and made it seem, to those who may mistake cause, for effect that the experiment of Confederation was a failure.

Protection is claimed by its interested advocates to be in the interest of the working classes. We know how false and hollow that claim has proven to be in Canada, and the following description of the women that work in the coke regions Pensylvania the hot bed of protection in the States, shows how successful nearly twenty years of protection has been in ameliorating the condition of the working classes. The New York Tribune, a strong taxationist advocate publishes this pleasant picture of a woman who works in the coke regions of Pensylvania:

"The woman stood in the doorway and was dressed in a rough, loose-fitting outer garment and an apron. Her person from the waist up was exposed. When she stooped over to handle the coke, she caught her hair between her teeth in order to keep it out of her way. Her feet were incased in a pair of heavy shoes, and her legs were exposed from the knees down. Her babe, which she brought to the works with her, lay in front of the car, with scarcely any covering except the shadow of a wheel-barrow, which was turned up in order to protect the child from the rays of the sun."

This woman's lot is not an enviable one. Yet she is such as protection tends to make the laborer, such as protection makes perform drudgery, that would debase a galley slave, to enrich the monopolist, in whose interest alone a protective tariff exists.

MOUNT PLEASANT.

We are glad to learn that Mr. I. Best, of [illegible], has commenced to rebuild his foundry, which was destroyed by fire some time ago, and which occasioned him a very heavy loss.

WESLEY.

Friday evening lightning struck and killed Henry Storey's oldest son Wesley, who was in one of his father's out-buildings, which were also totally destroyed, together with a new self binding reaper, a threshing machine and the hay crop. Two horses perished in the flames.

GANTSHARAWDED.

A large drive of logs has been passing through this village during the past week.

The post office has been removed to the west side of the river, on the corner opposite Mr. Tanner's hardware store.

Mr. R. W. Tanner has through his solicitor served a notice on the lumber companies who are keeping back the water for the purpose of floating their logs. Our mills are suffering inconvenience and loss by the scarcity of water occasioned by the action of the lumbermen. We hope the difficulty will be settled to the satisfaction of all concerned.

HASTINGS.

The days of the potato bug, says the Star, are evidently numbered, if the insect which Mr. John Lobb discovered on Friday last fulfills its mission. In size it is much smaller than the potato bug, but it is provided with a lance-like probescis which it has power of absorbing at will, and on which it impales the unlucky Colorado.

Building operations are going on apace this summer. Just outside the village limits, Mr. W. Berry is erecting a brick dwelling, while within the corporation, Mr. J. W. Dennes is putting up a large cabinet show and warehouse on Bridge Street; the frame work of Mr. Stewart's store is up, and Mr. Scriver is building an office on Front street.

PORT PERRY.

The inhabitants of Port Perry ask aid for the sufferers from fire. On July 3rd, 62 business places and 15 residences were burned with their contents, involving a loss of $345,000, insured for $182,000. One hundred persons were direct losers and 300 more were thrown out of employment. In Nov. last a fire destroyed $116,000 worth of property. The assessed value of the village this year was $300,000, the population is 1,000 and there is a debenture debt of $47,000. A circular has been issued which says: "Our yoke is too heavy for us to bear; our "once bright, pretty and prosperous village "has received a shock from which we fear "it cannot recover without assistance—"a parallel case has never been known in "this country." Contributions can be sent to W. J. McMurtry, Manager Ontario Bank, Port Perry.

COBOURG.

On Saturday as Lena Boswell was washing clothes she was approached by Minnie Stillwell, who took up a bottle lying on the window, and telling her that she would annoint her with "holy water," proceeded to pour the liquid on the young girl's head. The victim commenced to scream, and soon all the mill was in an uproar, and the liquid was found to be vitrol. The side of the young girl's face as well as her neck and arms are seriously burned. She will be marked for life.

On Wednesday afternoon, Miss Ella Tourje, daughter of Mr. Wm. Tourje, Esq., was married to Mr. E. S. Popham, B. A., Principal of Brandon High School.

Mr. John Fisher a former resident, a few days ago, met with a terrible accident, at his home in Winnipeg, by which he lost one of his eyes. He was attending to his cow, when she threw up her head, and the horn accidentally entered one of his eyes, completely destroying the sight.

LINDSAY.

The number of candidates at the entrance examinations of the Lindsay High School was 44, of which 24 were [illegible]les and 20 females.

The convent [illegible] a scene of activity. A large number of men are employed and others being taken on daily. The work has been confined principally to getting up the joists for the second and third floors so as to admit of the framing of the roof being erected.

Mr. T. Williams, head miller at Needler & Sadler's mill, was badly injured while on duty last week. His shirt sleeve caught in the gearing of the bolts and his arm was drawn in and ground by the teeth of the wheel in a most horrible manner. By grasping a post at hand Mr. Williams prevented himself from being drawn bodily into the wheels, and it was not until his shirt was torn from his body and pieces of flesh from his arm and side that he could break away. He now lies in a critical condition.

NORWOOD.

Mr. H. P. Leader has passed a very successful examination at the Royal Military College, Kingston.

Mr. H. Vars, our lightning bicyclist, made a trip between Norwood and Colborne, recently, a distance of thirty-two miles, in a few minutes over four hours.

Work was commenced on the elevator last week. The site is situated about one hundred yards west of the station. Mr. M. Scott has the contract for the stone-work.

The lawn social held on the Presbyterian Manse Grounds, under the auspices of the Presbyterian Church, on Tuesday evening last, was gratifying success. The grounds were handsomely and brilliantly illuminated with Chinese lanterns, and lit up an animated and enjoyable scene. There was an abundance of strawberries and cream. The Band furnished some excellent music which added materially to the success of the affair. The receipts from the event amounted to $40.00.

BOBCAYGEON.

Whilst Mr. and Mrs. George Justice were driving towards home the other evening, the team became startled, near Mr. Kelso's residence, and the buggy was over-turned. Mr. Justice was unhurt, but Mrs. Justice received a fracture of the arm, and had to be conveyed to the doctor's and have the arm set.

Another drive of logs is passing through. They were got out north of Minden and belong to Mr. Strickland. The drive contains from twenty-five to thirty thousand logs, and are of a good class. Ritchie and Cox have charge of it, Cox having brought down a raft of timber to Fenlon Falls where it is to be shipped by rail. The drive will probably be divided in Pigeon Lake in order to make quicker time.

It was reported last week that a resident of Harvey had been drowned but on investigation it was found not to be correct. People can't be to careful with water. It is treacherous stuff, and the less you have to do with it the better. At least this is what Mr. Smiff the gentleman who writes our leading articles tells us, and judging from the hotel scores with which we are constantly garnished, his carefulness of water must closely approach total abstinence.

Mr. John Magwood, Victoria Road, writes: 'Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyspeptic Cure is a splendid medicine. My customers say they never used anything so effectual. Good results immediately follow its use. I know its value from personal experience, having been troubled for 9 or 10 years with Dyspepsia, and since using it digestion goes on without that depressed feeling so well know to dyspeptics. I have no hesitation in recommending it in any case of Indigestion, Constipation, Heartburn, or troubles arising from a disordered stomach."

Prejudiced People.

My people are prejudiced against patent medicines but all who try Burdock Blood Bitters are compelled to acknowledge it worthy a patent as a valuable discovery. 29-2t

SCHOOL PIC-NIC.

On Thursday, June 26th, S. S. No. 12, Otonabee, fully enjoyed all the pleasure attendant on a thoroughly social pic-nic. Including the children there were about one hundred present. The use of the woods had been kindly granted by Mr. Burnham, and as few districts of country enjoy such a real old-time forest, with so many pleasant nooks and glades This natural beauty, together with a fine day and sumptuous repast, being the chief requisites of such a festivity, everything passed off pleasantly. Many thanks are due to our Secretary-Treasurer, Mr. H. S. Armstrong, for his efficient assistance.

Vital Questions!!!!

Ask the most eminent physician

Of any school, what is the best thing in the world for quieting and allaying all irritation of the nerves, and curing all forms of nervous complaints, giving natural, childlike refreshing sleep always?

And they will tell you unhesitatingly

"Some form of Hops!!!"

CHAPTER I.

Ask any or all of the most eminent physicians:

"What is the best and only remedy that can be relied on to cure all diseases of the kidneys and urinary organs; such as Bright's disease, diabetes, retention, or inability to retain urine, and all the diseases and ailments peculiar to Women"—

"And they will tell you explicitly and emphatically "Buchu!!!"

Ask the same physicians

"What is the most reliable and surest cure for all liver diseases or dyspepsia; constipation, indigestion, biliousness, malaria, fever, ague, &c.," and they will tell you:

Mandrake! or Dandelion!!!!"

Hence, when these remedies are combined with others equally valuable,

And compounded into Hop Bitters, such a wonderful and mysterious curative power is developed, which is so varied in its operations that no disease or ill health can possibly exist or resist its powers, and yet it is Harmless for the most frail woman, weakest invalid or smallest child to use.

CHAPTER II.

"Patients

"Almost dead or nearly dying"

For years, and given up by physicians, of Bright's and other kidney diseases, liver complaints, severe coughs, called consumption, have been cured.

Women gone nearly crazy!!!!!

From agony of neuralgia, nervousness, wakefulness, and various diseases peculiar to women.

People drawn out of shape from excruciating pangs of rheumatism, inflammatory and chronic, or suffering from scrofula.

Erysipelas:

"Salt rheum, blood poisoning, dyspepsia, indigestion, and, in fact, almost all diseases frail"

Nature is heir to

Have been cured by Hop Bitters, proof of which can be found in every neighborhood in the known world.

☞None genuine without a bunch of green Hops on the white label. Shun all the vile, poisonous stuff with "Hop" or "Hops" in their name. 28-4t.

J. H. Earl, West Shefford, P. Q., writes: 'I have been troubled with liver complaint for several years, and have tried different medicines with little or no benefit, until I tried Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, which gave me immediate relief, and I would say that I have used it since with the best effect. No one should be without it. I have tried it on my horse in cases of cuts, wounds, &c., and and I think it equally as good for horse as for man.'

Rings for Brides.

"Are wedding rings expensive? Well, no; they vary in price, but the dearest of them would break a comparatively poor man. This is the cheapest we have, fourteen carats and not very thick, and it only costs $4. This again is the most expensive I have in stock, weighs tolerably heavy, you see; is of the finest gold used for manufacturing purposes, twenty-two carats, and costs $15. Seems almost too heavy to wear, doesn't it? But a ring that would gall and weigh down a woman's finger wouldn't be reasonable to some marriages, after all. Yes, I sell quite a few of the cheaper ones. You would naturally think that as a man only buys one, or at most two such articles in the course of his life, he would not mind spending a few dollars on it. But that's according to how they feel, too.

"Some men aren't overburdened with sentiment. Why, a man bought a ring in September last, haggled over the price and chose one at $2. Day before last Sunday he came in and wanted the size altered straight-away. He was dressed in mourning and looked like a well-to-do clerk. He explained that his first wife had died in November, and he was going to be married again Christmas day, and as the ring was 'hardly worn' he thought it was no use buying another!

"Rings are broader and heavier than they were thirty years ago, but as a rule the purchaser's choice is guided pretty much according to how the lady feels about it. They say that in England the thin, old-fashioned ring is coming in again, but in New York, as I say, the ladies mostly prefer a broad and heavy one, and before marriage [illegible] a man generally is guided by his future wife's inclinations, and everything is done according as how she feels about it."—N. Y. Jeweler.

Tigers as Playthings.

Abram Bateman, of San Francisco, has two tiger kittens that were recently stolen from a tigress in an abandoned shaft of El Rocario mine, in Sonora. They were eight weeks old, and weighed thirty pounds apiece. Having been petted all their lives, they are as tame and playful as domestic kittens, and betray few signs of ferocity except when feeding, at which time they are unapproachable. They are kept confined in a cage in the back yard, but are often brought into the parlor and turned loose for the entertainment of guests. Then they evince their appreciation of their liberty by chasing each other, jumping over furniture, and scattering ladies and children in every direction. When tired of the play the kittens either climb to their owner's lap or sprawl on the sofa, and then purr contentedly until they fall asleep.

Personal Cleanliness.

Bathing is conservative of health, but all persons do not find it so. A cold plunge bath is by no means a panacea for all human ills, as some seem to think. An occasional wash from head to foot in winter, and bathing frequently in summer, may be considered among the valuable agencies for promoting health. But I have known delicate people to be injured instead of being benefited by cold bathing. For most persons a wet sponge passed rapidly over the surface and followed soon by friction with a rough towel is bath enough for health purposes. When a cold bath is not followed by a good surface glow, it is doing more harm than good.

It was a temperance meeting, and the speaker, with a smile of modesty, began: "Ladies and gentlemen, were I to talk lengthily upon this subject I would no doubt bore you. In a moment, however, a voice from the gallery was heard to retort, "Na fear, mister, you're no sharp enough for that."

Don Miguel, who was the first English-speaking settler in California, went there in 1817. He is now over eighty years old and lives in Los Angeles, where he and his wife are surrounded by their grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

George D. Robinson, Governor of Massachusetts, recommends that weekly payments of employes be made obligatory.

EDUCATIONAL.

Female Education Considered From the Medical Point of View by

Dr. Clouston,

Lecturer on Mental Diseases in the University of Edinburgh, Member of the Medical Boards of Several Charitable Institutions, and Physician to the Royal Edinburgh Asylum.

EDUCATION OF GIRLS.

Dr. Clouston, in the Popular Monthly, shows the position that if our females were thoroughly healthy in original constitution, the educationalists and their present overenthusiastic methods would not hurt our daughters permanently. But as few persons have faultless constitutions, there must be a great care as to individuals. Pointing out bodily defects he says:

The first bodily defect to which I shall refer, as the result of overstimulation of brain, is what we doctors call anæmia, or, in other words, bloodlessness. The girls look pale about the lips and have no rosy cheeks. This is manifestly most common in school-girls. Anyone can see it.

The next faulty bodily condition that may be caused by wrong methods of education is that of stunted growth. I have seen girls, the daughters of well-grown parents, who simply stopped growing too soon. They are more or less dwarfish specimens of their kind, this being caused, as I believe, by the vital and nervous force being appropriated by the mental part of the brain in learning its tasks and by the conditions of life in the school rooms not being good, the air bad, insufficient play hours, no play-ground, no play-room, no walking in the fresh air and sunshine.

I have seen other girls who grew tall enough, but wouldn't fatten. They remained thin and scrawny. Now, this is not what a woman should be at any age if it can be helped.

The next condition sometimes produced is best described by the word nervousness. That is a condition of mind and body in which there is want of stability and fixity, undue excitability, restlessness, want of solidity and ailments of constitution, ungrounded fears, deficient power of self-control, [illegible] in all directions, and a very great many other unpleasant things, far too numerous to mention here. This nervousness is commonly hereditary, but may be greatly aggravated or counteracted by the conditions of life, especially in youth. Such a constitution is a great curse to a woman, and renders her liable to many diseases. It means a brain wanting in reserve or surplus energy. Such a brain is like a galvanic battery that does not work steadily, but gives out too much power at one time, then suddenly is exhausted, and is always needing replenishing. There can be but little doubt that the tendency of our modern life is toward the development of the nervous type of constitution, or diathesis. American physicians and socialists are unanimous that this constitution is very common in their country. I think there can be little doubt that if we wish our descendants to multiply and cover the earth, we should try by all means and counteract this tendency to the nervous constitution in a morbid degree. It is most hereditary in all its forms. There are few families among the educated classes nowadays free from some taint of it, and it is easily increased. In the families that are now free there is much risk of its being developed in the period of adolescence in the girls, through the present system of education. All our modern ways of looking at life help to develop nerves in a bad sense. The ideal of man and woman has changed from strength to culture, from body to brain. The great brawny-muscled man, who knows nothing of sickness, but has few ideas, is looked down on; the rosy mother of a dozen healthy children, who has no taste for books, is little thought of. It may be that the time will come when such people will be more highly appreciated. Out of the nervous diathesis may arise all the forms of nervous disease, when their exciting causes are put in operation.

Strongly connected with nervousness is the tendency to suffer from pain without any actual disease being present to account for it; that is, to be the subject of headaches and neuralgias.

Headache is the most common thing suffered by schoolgirls, and originated by the condition of school-life. Dr. Truchler found that in Darmstadt, Paris, and Nuremburg, one-third of the pupils in the schools suffered more or less from headaches. I think we should find this proportion in our advanced girls' schools in Edinburgh. He concludes that it is caused by the intellectual exertion, combined with bad air, with the annoyances and excitements and worries, the wasting and rasping anxieties of school life. Nothing is so terrible as severe neuralgia, and beyond a doubt girls acquire it often enough by the condition of school-life. Headaches in a schoolgirl usually mean exhausted nerve power through overwork, overexcitement, overanxiety, or bad air. Rest, a good laugh, or a country walk will usually cure it readily enough to begin with. But to become subject to headaches is a very serious matter, and all such nervous diseases have a nasty tendency to recur, to become periodic, to be set up by the same causes, to become an organic habit of the body. For any woman to become liable to severe neuralgia is a most terrible thing. It means that while it lasts life is not worth having. It paralyses the power to work, it deprives her of the power to enjoy anything, it tends toward irritability of temper, it tempts to the use of narcotics and stimulants.

There can be no doubt that too hard school-work in young women during the adolescent period tends to bring out hereditary, nervous, and other weaknesses. The great natural protection against these is sound health and general bodily vigor in a frame that has been brought carefully to full maturity, harmonious and healthy in all its functions. This law is found to prevail in regard to nervous hereditary weaknesses, that the stronger and more direct the tendency, the earlier in life such weakness is apt to show itself. If we can postpone it, we can frequently avert it altogether.

MANUAL TRAINING IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Supt. Seaver, of the Boston public schools, says: Education through apprenticeship to trades has disappeared, and the time has been filled up with larger amounts of school-book instruction, and the consequence is that, through lack of opportunity, the native aptitude of many boys for handicraft is quite ignored. There doubtless is in our city boys an ample fund of latent mechanical ingenuity, which only awaits proper treatment to bring it out and lead its possessors to the right occupation for using it.

My hope is that a public free school on the plan of the school of mechanic arts may be established in Boston. The [illegible] for it in our [illegible] side with the high school. This can be done as soon as the taxpayers and their representatives at City Hall see the wisdom of it. Let [illegible] the [illegible] learning [illegible] the [illegible] possible, develop [illegible] purposes [illegible] example, [illegible] common wood-working tools [illegible] mer, saw, plane, auger, chisel and try-square—is ready to enter several different trades with immediate advantage to himself, although he may not yet have learned the special details of any one of them.

Now, I am sanguine enough to believe that the introduction of the manual-training element into school work would promote still more a valuable reform which seeks to abolish mere nominal teaching and replace it by real teaching, that is, a teaching that trains mental power rather than loads the memory that fills the mind with the solid merchandise of knowledge and not with its empty packing cases. The one branch of our present school instruction, most largely to be improved by joining it with manual training, is drawing. Not many years ago drawing was made obligatory by statute. The reason was that drawing was important as a branch of industrial education, and industrial education was much needed by the people—especially by the people of cities. Well, drawing has been introduced at great trouble and expense, and in spite of no little passive opposition. Is this expenditure of money and effort justified? Yes, I think so. And the results satisfactory? No, not yet. And why? Because industrial education, through drawing alone, is work only half done. The other half, modeling, carving, anything having in it the constructive element has hitherto been wanting. Delineation and construction are two parts of one whole; neither has full educational value without the other. As work in the chemical laboratory is needed really to possess one's self of the chemical knowledge, which is only acquired in the dressing of the boys, so work in modeling and construction is needed to give precision and endurance to that knowledge of forms which drawings merely symbolize.

KITCHEN AND GARDEN SCHOOL.

What is this new kind of school? some one asks. It is a combination of songs, exercises, and plays, designed in a thoroughly practical way to train a child in simple housework. It is divided into six distinct parts or occupations, each taking a month to master.

They comprehend the following details of domestic work: Kindling fires, waiting on the door, bed-making, sweeping and dusting, completely arranging a room with the manipulations of broom, whisk-broom, feather-duster, etc. Also all laundry processes, from the preparation of the tubs to the delicacies of polishing and folding; scrubbing, and laying the dinner-table in the due order of courses. In connection with this, a pricking lesson teaches in kindergarten style, the parts of beef and mutton, and how to cook and cut each. Last of all comes the mud-pie play. In this crowning device of the inventress of the system, with molding-clay as a substitute for dough and pastry, the children knead bread, turn tiny rolls, cut out biscuit, and make pies.

All the lessons are enlivened and emphasized with appropriate songs. Thus, under loving guidance, with the simple device of toy appliances for real domestic apparatus, these children of poverty acquire the order, precision, and neatness essential to household service. Here is the system: What more is needed? Teachers. These should be young ladies who will give their services. They should enter upon the work in the spirit of loving desire to help poor little children.

For the preparation of teachers Miss Huntington has a normal class at the Wilson Mission, No. 125 St. Mark's place, New York City, once every month, and there the ladies can learn. If they live away from New York, Miss Torrey, the associate normal class teacher, will gladly go and teach a class of twelve or more members. The age of children in the regular classes varies from 6 to 16. Those over 12 appreciate the lessons more than the younger ones, and therefore are profited more by them. Miss Huntington has prepared two books, giving the music, song, and outlines of the lessons.—Home Journal.

A Family of Asinary Genus.

Nor must we forget that if there are women who strive to unsex themselves by becoming too masculine, so there are men who most effectually unsex themselves by a general emasculation of dress and manner which would readily strike a stranger from another planet as representing a transition period between the sexes. If a manish woman offends our good taste and judgment, a womanish man is an insipid embodiment of nothingness, and ought to be treated as a zoological curiosity representing some hitherto unknown family of the asinary genus. From these considerations it therefore follows that if there are female oddities who furnish the weapons of satire to those who are opposed to the advancement of women, there are also masculine oddities who show how closely a man can sometimes resemble a monkey. Touching the important questions of life in the most remote and superficial manner, and representing a phase which cannot be seriously treated, these peculiar creatures excite our risibility and cause us to abandon ourselves to the claims of Democritus, the laughing philosopher. Much as the study of these superficialities may amuse us, they do not, however, and they cannot, reach those strata of evidence from which we must draw our conclusions if we desire to be philosophical and consistent.—Henry C. Pedder, in Manhattan.

Women have tact always, and frequently a talent for making themselves agreeable to new acquaintances. A lady sojourning at a certain New England resort last summer was introduced to another lady who had registered from Cleveland. "So you are from Ohio," graciously commenced the former; "what is your husband a candidate for?"

Lager beer, which thirty years ago was practically unknown in this country, is now made by 2,500 immense establishments, with over $150,000,000 capital invested. The value of this production each year is over $200,000,000.

PETERBOROUGH, JULY 17, 1884.

The Bribery Commission.

The Royal Commission, consisting of Vice-Chancellor Proudfoot (chairman), Judges Senkler and Scott, appointed to investigate the Tory bribery plot, began its sittings on Monday. As was to be expected, the Tories seek to obstruct the inquiry in every possible way, thus showing their guilt, for, if they were innocent, they would give every possible assistance in arriving at the truth. The first day Mr. McKim, M.P.P., Mr. Awrey, M.P.P., and Mr. Denison were examined as witnesses; and on Tuesday, Mr. Balfour, M.P.P., and Mr. Graham, M.P.P. New and important evidence was elicited, which we shall more fully refer to hereafter.

Extending Water Street.

It is to be hoped that there will be no time lost in carrying out the resolution of the Town Council, ordering a survey of Water street, with a view of opening it for public traffic as far south as Wolfe street. We believe Mr. R. B. Rogers, P.L.S., has received instructions to make the survey. The importance of opening this street, and at once, is great. The operation of the Ontario and Quebec Railway line, unavoidably, it seems, interferes seriously with George street as a thoroughfare in the vicinity of the railway track. The station and freight sheds are so close to George street that arriving trains from either way must necessarily, not only encroach on this street, but extend all the way across it, thus completely blocking traffic, both vehicular and pedestrian, from both directions. Parties coming to market from a portion of Otonabee and South Monaghan will be subjected to delay, a considerable matter to the farmer, the value of whose load will be often greatly enhanced by his early arrival on the market. In case of delay he will have to drive back as far as Rink street, at least, and cross to Aylmer. A distance of over half a mile will thus be added to the length of his journey. Vehicles going south will also be subjected to delay, which, in the case of a funeral procession, will be painfully vexatious. Besides, horses are liable, also, to be frightened, by the proximity of the engines, into displays of activity out of keeping with the solemnity of the occasion. Many other objections might be stated, but they will suggest themselves readily to any one that reflects on the matter. The inconvenience is one that the railway cannot very well, in the course of traffic, avoid. Railways are necessary, and the benefits and advantages they confer are always offset by certain unavoidable public inconveniences. In this case the remedy is, however, simple. By the opening up of Water street, persons coming from the south, if delayed by trains, can pass along Wolfe street to Water street, a distance, at this point, of less than half a block, and crossing the railway track a safe distance from trains at the station, return to George street by Dalhousie, or proceed up Water street to the market. Persons going south on George street have the same means of overcoming the difficulty. It is to be hoped that the Street Committee will see that the work is promptly performed. The summer season is pretty well over, and it will not be in the public interest to have the matter delayed till the advent of winter postpones the opening of the street till spring. The Council has endorsed the proposition, and there is no reason why the work should not be begun at once and speedily completed.

At the Orange demonstration at Ottawa, Dr. Wild, the "Bond street Prophet," was the orator of the day. Among other wild statements was one that in 1882 Mr. Blake made a bargain with Messrs. Smith and O'Donoghue, but that Sir John out-bid him. A batch of explanations is in order. Will Messrs. Smith and O'Donoghue explain the fact that Dr. Wild asserts, and give us details as to their double purchase? Will the Dr. explain how he, a professedly Christian minister, can consistently say that he sympathized with Sir John in the transaction, because he was the successful sinner? Will Hon. Mackenzie Bowell, a prominent Orangeman, explain why, although he was within a stone's throw of the Orange demonstration grounds, he was not present? Will somebody explain why Sir John disallowed the Provincial Act of Orange incorporation, and at two sessions refused, contrary to promise, to pass a bill incorporating the Orange body?

Obstructionists.

The existence of a senatorial body, with the present relation to the responsible body, the Commons, makes government by the people merely a sorcerous fiction. It is a proud boast that the government of Canada is practically by the will of the people, but when the Senate can step in and nullify the popular will as expressed by their legal representatives, the less boasting done the more becoming. We all know how the Senate, as a body representing a political party, has in times past been able to thwart the will of the people and to make a laughing stock of representative legislation. It is well known that business is conducted by them in the most perfunctory and careless manner, bills being even passed upon without the formality of a reading. A recent example of the power for evil of a senatorial body, is furnished by the Imperial House of Lords in their rejection of Mr. Gladstone's Franchise Bill. This bill proposes to make citizens of two millions of British subjects, who have heretofore been denied the primary right of British subjects, the possession of the parliamentary franchise. Such being the scope of the bill, it will be readily conceded that its becoming law is a most vital matter. In this case the Lords are merely acting the part of obstructionists All they can do is to delay the matter. These relics of a feudal fogyism have never in the past been able to finally strangle the voice of the people and to deny them the rights they unitedly demand. Sooner or later they are forced to recognize the fact, vox populi vox Dei. Not only has this latest outrage on representative principles dangerously developed the obstructive nature of the House of Lords, but it is a self-inflicted blow at the stability of the body itself. As the London Times says: "The House of Lords have nullified four months' labor of the House of Commons, and have deprived 2,000,000 persons of the right of franchise. The struggle will only end in defeat, and the Lords have placed themselves in antagonism with the popular assembly in a most defiant and aggressive manner."

The Democratic Candidate.

At the Democratic convention held at Chicago last week, Governor Cleveland ex-governor of New York was selected on the second ballot by about 140 ballots above the number required for a choice. Hendricks is the candidate for the vice-presidency. A better choice than Cleveland the Democrats could not have made. He will probably secure the solid vote of the party except perhaps, a portion of the Tammany ring; he will also catch the vote of the bolting Republicans who repudiate Blaine on account of his personal corruption. Personally Cleveland is a strong man, and his supporters will not as will those of Blaine, have to go through the campaign, with perpetual apologies for the bad character of their candidate. Cleveland is a self made man, which will with the Yankees add another element to his popularity.

The Democratic platform is essentially one of reform. Tariff reform is a cardinal plank, and the chief point at issue, though it is more implied than expressed is the tariff question. The prospects are that Cleveland will be the next president of the United States. New York being regarded as a pivotal state, the fact that Cleveland was in 1882 elected governor by the immense majority of 192,000, promises well for his success. With Cleveland for president, Canada's relative position to the United States will be more satisfactory.

Blaine is a pronounced Anglophobist, hating everything British, most cordially, and, with him controlling the policy of the Administration, Canada, will not secure that fair or generous consideration in commercial matters which she might fairly expect from the Democratic party, which is practically, if not avowedly, opposed to the narrow Chinese-wall, protective policy, the chief plank of the Republican platform. From now till next November our Yankee cousins will be in the throes of a presidential struggle.

Editorial Notes.

The following are the dates of the coming Provincial election trials:—West Middlesex, Aug. 5, before Judges Patterson and Galt, at London; Cardwell, Aug. 20, before Judges Ferguson and Rose, at Orangeville; South Renfrew, Aug. 20, before Judges Burton and Galt, at Pembroke.

Judge Allen, of New Brunswick, has rendered a decision that will be of interest in Scott Act communities. The plaintiff sued for the price of liquor sold to defendant, who in turn retailed it against the law where the Act is in force. The Judge held that the plaintiff could not recover, the liquor being sold by him for an illegal purpose.

The Tory newspaper organs received $100,000 from the Federal Treasury for printing and advertising in connection with the Immigration services alone. Is it to be wondered at that such a Government can do no wrong in the eyes of its subsidized sheets, that such sheets are ever ready to defend and laud the most corrupt jobs perpetrated directly or indirectly by the present Government?

John Joseph Hawkins has again returned to Ottawa to bother the Government for a situation. John Joseph seems to be hard to please in the matter of pap. He has, this bout, struck Ottawa in a good time. Since Shield's "frozen whisky" dodge is impracticable in July weather, no doubt John Joseph can be detailed to do some dirty work in Muskoka for his Ottawa chiefs. Of course, the job is only temporary, but the Government have a way of making even jobs of this kind pay pretty roundly.

On Saturday last Mr. A. H. Roe, M.P.P. for Lennox, died of heart disease at Napanee. Mr. Roe was elected member for Lennox in 1883 by a majority of 174. He was a man of considerable, but rather erratic, ability and a pronounced Tory politician. His death causes a vacancy in the representation of a riding, the Dominion seat of which is held by a Reformer, Mr. Allison. The former local representative Mr. Hawley, was Reform and it is possible that at the forth-coming election the Liberals may redeem the riding.

Mr. John Carnegie, the representative of West Peterborough, shows almost as morbid a desire for notoriety as the late lamented Guiteau. He will not, of course, put his person in peril, but he will risk his reputation. Before the last session of the Legislature, "Sarah" was boomed as one of the big guns, that was to help blow the government into smithereens, but when he came to get amongst the very mild ability of the leading opponitionists, he was found too small bore to be mounted as a piece of intellectual artillery and was accordingly stood quietly among the side arms. His sense of shame is so blunted, however, that he swallowed the perpetual snub which his relegation to the back benches implied, and now he wants to demonstrate more openly, that his lack of ability—or untrustworthiness, has excluded him from the confidence of the Tory opposition. He has even had the assurance to write to the clerk of the Bribery Commission requesting to be called as a witness before the Commission. The most tangible result likely to arise from this request will be the receipt of the ten dollars that accompanies the subpœna. It isn't probable that "Sarah" will tell much about the bribery business of his party, for the simple reason that the leaders have so feeble an estimate of his ability and so fearfully an estimate of his lack of discretion, that he was not trusted with the party secrets. For a gentleman of Mr. Carnegie's modesty, he takes a good deal of trouble to demonstrate that he was not considered worthy of being entrusted with the secrets of his party.

A meeting of the council was held on July 14th. After routine, a motion was adopted to accept the offer of the Indian Department to transfer the two Islands in the river within the Municipality—Nos. 8 and 32—to the village, for $36. The clerk was instructed to collect all license moneys due. The by-law respecting collecting arrears was amended and accounts, chiefly for lumber and street surveys, to the amount of $227.21, were ordered to be paid. The clerk was instructed to enter all the village by-laws into a book for the purpose, he to be paid extra for the by-laws not entered by Mr. Sanders, the Reeve to assist him in checking the same.

FIRE PROTECTION.

At a public meeting held on Friday evening, July 11th, to consider this matter, Mr. J. C. Sherin in the chair, resolutions were adopted asserting the desirability of fire protection, and appointing Drs. Bell and Caldwell, Messrs. Griffin, Cochrane and William Graham a committee to find out the advantages and cost of the different systems proposed, to report at a meeting to be held July 25th.

THE LAKEFIELD DAM, ETC.

To the Editor of the EXAMINER:

SIR,—Two letters have lately appeared in your columns regarding the Lakefield dam. The first letter I did not read, but "Workingman's" letter in your issue of the 10th is so foreign to the truth that we think it only due to the Government at Ottawa that we should call the attention of the public to the way in which "Workingman" romanced, not to give it a harder name, which would be unnecessary if "Workingman" had written over his own signature instead of assuming a nom de plume to which he is not entitled.

We will confine ourselves to those parts of "Workingman's" letter referring to us. He says: "Now the firm (Stricklands) almost begged the Ontario Government to take the dam off their hands as a gift." In answer to this we will quote from the Ontario Public Works Report for 1882, page 13 under the heading of "Unforseen and unprovided for."

"In the early part of the present year, the Department was notified that in accordance with an injunction granted by the Court of Chancery Messrs R. & C. Strickland intended lowering the dam at Lakefield 23 inches below the height it had been kept for a number of years, unless the Government would purchase the structure for $3,000, grant them several unreasonable privileges and assume all responsibility regarding the height at which it had been so maintained. If the dam were lowered as above mentioned, the river between Lakefield and Young's Point would not be navigable, and this would cause serious loss and inconvenience to parties residing or having business above Lakefield, there being no railway communication north of that point. I therefore, pursuant to instructions at once proceeded to the locality in order to make an examination and report on the probable value of the structure, but, upon my arrival found the water too high to admit of such being satisfactorily accomplished. I acquainted Messrs. Strickland of this fact and made an arrangement for the department to assume temporary control until an examination could be made, the Government to be responsible in the meantime for the height of water maintained.

"The necessary examination was made later on in the season, and the sum of one thousand dollars and an undertaking on the part of the Province to permanently maintain the dam at the height at which it had previously been kept, were offered Messrs. Strickland for their interest in the structure but this was refused. It was then decided to assume the dam on behalf of the Province under the "Public Works Act" and proceedings were commenced accordingly.

"While these proceedings were pending, the Department was informed that the Dominion Government had decided that the dam was required in connection with the Trent Valley Canal scheme, and consequently that the last mentioned Government had made arrangements with Messrs. Strickland, and had taken control of the works. While under the temporary charge of this Department it was necessary to make several repairs and improvements thereon."

We think that the above extract contradicts "workingman's" statement that we offered the dam as a gift, without any further comment on our part.

The Dominion Government gave us $1,500 instead of 5,000, for the Lakefield dam, and the balance of the $5000, was an allowance made us to meet the expenditure occasioned by our having to adapt our Raceway, Mill machinery &c., &c., to the increased head of water, and that amount we find was not nearly sufficient for the purpose.

We do not think that "Workingmen" is a bona-fide workingman of Lakefield, and the genuine workingmen of this village will not thank him for leading people to suppose that they have to travel the country seeking for work. We do not know a workingman here who cannot always, and is not now, commanding the best wages going.

In conclusion we must thank you, Sir, for allowing us so much of your valuable space which we do not use for the purpose of answering "workingman," whose ideas on this or any other subject are of no consequence to us, but that the public might know that we only received what we were justly entitled to from the Dominion Government, who, in settling all claims of a similar kind between this place and Fenelon Falls, have not paid more than the claimants were were justly entitled to.

We remain, Sir,
Yours truly,
R. C. STRICKLAND.

THE GRAND CANOE PARADE.

A Brilliant Success.

The second of the series of illuminated canoe parades of the Peterborough Boating club, took place on Little Lake on Thursday evening and was a brilliant success, both literally and figuratively. That beautiful spot the eastern slope and natural terrace of Burnham's Peninsula was thronged with spectators, over a thousand persons being present.

Darkness being the best setting for the display, it was about nine o'clock before the brilliantly illuminated canoes formed in line at the point, under command of Col. Harry Rogers, who, as admiral pro cespere, occupied the flag ship. The line contained over fifty canoes, all brilliantly illuminated—some of the illuminations being either profuse in number, the highest 15 Chinese lanterns, or original in design. On the command of the admiral the glittering column, advanced down the lake. The sight, as the iridescent line of many colored lights, reproduced in a thousand shifting gleams by reflection in the paddle-troubled water, tossed and wavered like the combinations of a kaleidoscope, was a magnificent one, and drew earnest applause from the many spectators occupying the slope of the point. At Cemetery point, the column wheeled to the left and returned to the starting place. The canoes then formed in single file and as the long line stretched out in sinuous curves, it resembled a huge fiery sea serpent disporting on the bosom of the lake. During the whole of the manœuvres, the discharge of Roman candles was continuous. The colored stars, now shooting from one canoe and then another, made interlacing lines of colored light, producing a weirdly splendid spectacle.

At the same time a beautiful display of fireworks under the management of Messrs. Archie Moffatt and George Stevenson, went off from the centre pier in the lake. With the sombre line of pines, on the cemetery shore showing night-black in the darkness, for a back ground, the display had a splendid effect.

During the evening a selection of airs discoursed in fine style by the City Band, added greatly to the interest of the occasion.

The entire entertainment was a most delightful one and the club will certainly be encouraged by the great interest taken in it by the public, to enter into the next illuminated parade with redoubled energy.

NOTES.

An artist was on the ground with his sketch book, outlining a possible future picture of the parade.

The young ladies interpreted the transparency of the "big 17" to mean that "sweet sixteen" had since last summer got a year older and much stouter. Thus love sentiment can lurk even inside a paper lantern.

The exclamation was often heard, "What a beautiful place this point is for a park!"

A foot-bridge, thrown out on the north side of the railway bridge, would be an immense public convenience. It might at the Ashburnham shore, terminate in a sub-way under the railway track, thus giving access to Peninsula Park, without crossing above the track.

Col. Rogers in the manœuvres had a good deal of trouble with his "left"; going down the wind "boosted" the unskilful canoeist, top heavy with transparencies, ahead, and kept him back on the return trip.

The steamer Whistle-wing, Captain Carson, was on the lake with its load of spectators. The captain proposes in future to have the band on board, the palace scow attached for dancing and to make the tickets for the fine evening's entertainment thus secured, only ten cents.

HAZEL BRAE HOME.

Peterborough Branch of Dr. Barnardo's Home.

In view of the fact that a detachment of children, which with those in charge, will number about 150, from the Home in London, is expected to arrive in Peterborough on Tuesday, July 22nd, a brief sketch of the condition of Hazel Brae, the home prepared for them, will be of interest.

By the munificent liberality of G. A Cox, Esq., this beautiful property has been placed at the disposal of Dr. Barnardo. The house, an elegant brick mansion of three stories, occupies a commanding position about midway between the heads of Aylmer and George streets, standing in grounds of five acres in extent. These consist of lawn, orchard and flower and vegetable gardens. These will, to the London waifs, many of whom have doubtless seen no other shade of green "on the native heath," seem a paradise, while from the windows of the House, the view will take in on one side the wide area of clustered roofs comprising the town, on the other a charming landscape of billowy reaches of woodland alternating with tilled fields, "with verdure clad," or yellow with the deepening gold of the ripening harvest.

WITHIN.

Within, the house is admirably adapted to to the purposes of the "Home," which will be under the charge of a staff, composed of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Duff, superintendent; Miss Millie Sanderson, corresponding secretary, and Mr. A. B. Owen, travelling agent, whose duty it is to visit the children, who have been placed at service or adopted, and to bring out from London, detachments from the other homes.

The building is thus laid out for use. On the left of the wide entrance hall, is the private parlour of Mr. and Mrs. Duff, who in consideration of the social sacrifices their position entails, are entitled to the seclusion and comfort this well-furnished and comfortable room admits of. Facing the entrance is the dining-room for the staff, and to the left end of the staircase hall is the secretary's office, and to the right of the hall, is entered by two doors, the capacious, well lighted play room, the former drawing room of the residence. The kitchen has been converted into a dining hall, for the children. Opening off this is an annex, added by Mr. Cox, fitted up as a lavatory, where the youngsters perform their toilets. In the second story are the sleeping rooms of the staff, and a portion is used for a dormitory. This, together with the third story, is fitted with neat little single cot beds, sufficient to sleep 150 children. Each cot is neatly made up, the covering being a grey blanket, with spotless pillows, etc. To a lad or girl, whose memories go back a few months to the time when their softest couch was under a cart or archway, in a coal bin, or in the more sheltered but more repulsive squalor of a lodging house, these comfortable beds will be the incarnation of princely luxuriousness—a realization of something which, to their one-time wretchedness, seemed as unattainable as, to the Scriptural Dives, is "Abraham's bosom."

The staff of servants required is only two girls, a large share of the work being done by the orphans who are thus practically initiated into the mysteries of housekeeping.

Hazel Brae is only a temporary home for the orphans. As soon as possible they are placed in situations, or adopted, and thus make room for fresh arrivals. For the first detachment, to arrive on the 22nd inst., there have already been in excess of the number.

As the Home is due to the liberality of a Peterborough citizen, so to other citizens is due the furnishing and fitting of it for the reception of its future inmates. The following to the furnishing of Hazel Brae Home:—Mesdames Whyte, W. Bradburn, Jeffers and Morrow, and Miss Dugan, and Messrs. Wm. Gooderham (Toronto), Arthur White, J. Stevenson, Hall, Innes & Co., Connel & Co., Fairweather & Co., James Alexander, Adam Hall, W. W. Johnston, B. Shortly, I. Robinson, A. L. Davis, D. W. Dumble, W. Dayman, D. Sim, E. Webb, D. Belleghem, A. Mercer, F. A. Passmore, J. G. Macklin, Harry Winch, Ed. Wood, E. Dawson, J. C. T. Lacy and "A Friend."

In addition, it will be necessary to have refreshments prepared for the party on its arrival. Any contributions sent to Hazel Brae Home will be thankfully received by the committee, who will be in attendance there on Tuesday morning to receive them.

On Wednesday evening, July 23rd, a garden party and sale of useful articles will be held on the grounds, and all who are desirous of seeing the Home and the children will then have an opportunity of doing so for the first, and probably the last time, as these children will at once be scattered to the separate homes already provided for them. A small entrance fee will be charged.

Ladies requiring an evening wrap will find a choice variety, very cheap, at Turabull's.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Passing the Estimates for the Year.

On Tuesday evening, July 15th, a meeting was held in the Board room. All the members present.

THE ESTIMATES.

Dr. Burnham, chairman of the Finance Committee, then presented the report, showing the estimated receipts and expenditures for the coming educational year, which may be summarized as follows:—Estimated receipts on Collegiate Institute account, $2,467.39; Expenditure, $5,917.39; amount required from ratepayers, $3,550. On Public Schools account, the estimated receipts are: $1434; estimated expenditure, $8,334; amount required from ratepayers, $6,900. Total estimated cost of Public Schools and Collegiate Institute, $14,251. Deducting from this sum the estimated receipts, there is left $10,450 to be provided for by taxation.

On motion to pass the detailed estimates, Mr. Dumble insisted on the importance of an amount, say $100, being put in the estimates for ventilation. He had rather buy flannels for the children, if necessary, and give them plenty of cool and fresh air.

The estimates were passed as presented.

PROPERTY COMMITTEE.

Mr. Errett, chairman, presented the report of the Property Committee, which stated that the committee had arranged to re-seat, during the vacation, the room in which the Board met, and also seat and prepare the "north-east room" for the smaller children attending the school.

The committee recommended certain improvements in the boiler and steam pipes that would conduce to an economy of fuel. The floors and building, where necessary, were to be repaired.

In regard to the scheme of ventilation, recommended by Mr. Gordon, of Gordon & Helliwell, architects, Toronto, the cost would be about $1200, and the committee would not recommend that the work be done this year.

The report was adopted.

The Board then resolved itself into the committee on Appointments, to consider the appointment of the staff of the Collegiate Institute, and to consult with Dr. Tassie, the newly elected Principal, on the subject.

At the meeting of the committee, Mr. Dumble in the chair, it was decided, after consultation with Dr. Tassie, to advertise in the Globe and Mail for three assistant teachers to complete the staff—a mathematical master, an English master, and a modern language master. The consideration of the proposal, strongly favored by Dr. Tassie, to set up a preparatory department in connection with the Institute, was deferred for future deliberation. Applications for the teaching staff will be received up to July the 28th, and on Tuesday, July 29th, the Board will meet to finally pass upon the applications made.

THE BATTLE OF THE BOYNE.

The one hundred and ninety-fourth anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne was celebrated by the Orange fraternity of this district at Cobourg on Saturday last. At six o'clock the "City" Band went by special train to Lakefield to act as musical convoy to the brethren from that section. The train arrived in Peterborough with these and the Nassau lodge, and a procession was formed at the Murray street crossing, where the train halted. The procession as formed, consisting of Young Canadian L.O.L. No. 1264, Lakefield; Lakefield L.O.L. No. 122; Nassau L.O.L. No. 457, Bro. W. King, W.M.; McWilliams True Blue Lodge No. 23, Bro. F. Weir, W.M.; Peterborough L.O.L. No. 46, Bro. J. Batten, W.M.; Peterborough L. O.L. No. 80, Bro. T. Brown, W.M. Bro. R. Weir, County Master, led the procession, and Bro. Geo. W. Hall acted as Marshall. The procession, headed by the City Band, playing, passed up Murray street, down George street, and by Charlotte street to the station, where it took train, the brethren and others comfortably filling ten coaches. At Fraserville and Millbrook there were large additions to the passenger list. The train arrived in Cobourg at eleven o'clock. The rain was falling heavily and the marching was a matter of great discomfort, yet the brethren held their walk. About twenty-five lodges assembled at Victoria Hall, where addresses were delivered. The day passed quietly and, but for the rain, pleasantly. The Peterborough party arrived home about nine o'clock.

INCIDENTS.

While marching up George street, on the return home, the band frightened a horse attached to a buggy in which one Netterby and a lady were seated. The buggy was upset, the horse being quiet was easily held. No damage done. Mr. Ed. Brown was at the same time driving down street. "Fanny B." refused to face the music, and, turning tail, came up street at her own pace.

While the special train was coming north, Wesley Ogden attempted to jump off at the Cavan street crossing, about half a mile from Millbrook, and, falling under the wheels, had his left foot so badly crushed by the wheels that it had to be amputated.

IN THE CROP REPORTS.

There has, unfortunately, been no good reason to doubt that the disease which has recently broken out in Toulon, France, is the Oriental scourge known as Asiatic cholera. People, for many reasons, are slow to admit the existence of such an unwelcome visitor among them. But, so far as Toulon is concerned, unfortunately the fact appears to be indisputable. And, what is still worse, it is spreading. Several deaths have unquestionably occurred in Marseilles; and though as the announcement is not yet made, it is not improbable that it has even reached Paris. There appears to be no doubt that it is at Lyons. It is still early in the season; and it is impossible to say how far it may spread before the end of summer.

The American press is giving the warning and counselling careful preparation in their great cities for the coming of the enemy, which may be in their midst at almost any moment. Toulon, it is said, is being punished for the unspeakable filthiness of her streets and houses. Though its filth has not originated the disease, it has furnished the conditions most favorable for its rapid propagation. And in consequence of the wretchedly unsanitary condition of this dirty city, it is probable not only will hundreds, it may be thousands, of its own population perish, but it will constitute a plague spot from whence the disease will spread to all parts of France, and most likely to many other countries. And what is true of Toulon will do double be true of some other filthy cities both in the Old World and the New.

The New York Times asks the question in respect to that great city, "Will any measures be taken to make this city tolerably clean before the cholera is brought to our doors?"

KING'S EVIL

Was the name formerly given to Scrofula because of a superstition that it could be cured by a king's touch. The world is wiser now, and knows that can only be cured by a thorough purification of the blood. If this is neglected, the disease perpetuates its taint through generation after generation. Among its earlier symptomatic developments are Eczema, Cutaneous Eruptions, Tumors, Boils, Carbuncles, Erysipelas, Purulent Ulcers, Nervous and Physical Collapse, etc. If allowed to continue, Rheumatism, Scrofulous Catarrh, Kidney and Liver Diseases, Tubercular Consumption, and various other dangerous or fatal maladies, are produced by it.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

Is the only powerful and always reliable blood-purifying medicine. It is so effectual an alterative that it eradicates from the system Hereditary Scrofula, and the kindred poisons of contagious diseases and mercury. At the same time it enriches and vitalizes the blood, restoring healthful action to the vital organs and rejuvenating the entire system. This great

Regenerative Medicine

Is composed of the genuine Honduras Sarsaparilla, with Yellow Dock, Stillingia, the Iodides of Potassium and Iron, and other ingredients of great potency, carefully and scientifically compounded. Its formula is generally known to the medical profession, and the best physicians constantly prescribe AYER'S SARSAPARILLA as an

Absolute Cure

For all diseases caused by the vitiation of the blood. It is concentrated to the highest practicable degree, far beyond any other preparation for which like effects are claimed, and is therefore the cheapest, as well as the best blood purifying medicine, in the world.

Faithful to Death;

OR,

THE FARMER'S DAUGHTER.

"I will go—if you think it advisable," he said, and her face cleared as though by magic.

"Of course it is advisable," she replied. "You may always trust to me, Eric. I know what is best for you. As for the people here, they can do without you. I will say you were called away on business, and then they will be quite satisfied. I am glad you have decided to go with us; Lady Gerton will be pleased too, and I am sure you will find the benefit of it. There is Mrs. Vaughan. Shall I ask her to get your portmanteau and things packed?"

There was genuine sorrow in the face of the farmer's wife

"It seems very hurried, sir," she said; "I hope we have done nothing to displease you."

"No people could have been kinder, Mrs. Vaughan," he replied. "I shall always be grateful; I shall come back to [illegible]"

Ah! her doubts and fears vanished when she saw the handsome douceur that Mr. St. John placed in her hand.

"I shall come back to see you," he repeated, and Lady May thought there was something significant in the tone of his voice.

So it was settled. Mrs. Vaughan went to pack his things, and his heart sched for Bonnie Doon. He must see her. Where had she gone? He could not leave without bidding her good-bye. He must see her to tell her that he should come again. There was just this one comfort that she knew nothing of Lady May and his engagement to her. He never dreamed how quickly Lady Gerton had found him out, or what prompt measures she had taken to secure Lady May's happiness.

He thought he should be able to see her; but then he remembered how she had gone with Lady Gerton. It was useless for him to follow them; he would wait until they returned to the house, and then he could see her; he longed for the moment; he had not known until then how much he loved her. He waited, but there was no trace of Bonnie Doon. After a time he saw Lady Gerton coming through the garden, but she was alone, and Lady May was telling him that tea was on the table, and he must be quick, for they had a long drive. But where was she? Where was Bonnie Doon? He could not hear her footsteps or her voice; he could not see her, and his heart grew heavy with unutterable pain. He could not leave without saying "good-bye," and whispering that he should come again. He could not leave without that.

"Come, Eric," cried Lady May, briskly, "you must make a good tea! We have such a long drive."

Where oh, where, was Bonnie Doon.

CHAPTER XII.

Where was Bonnie Doon? How had the white dove been slaughtered,—how had the gentle, loving heart been broken? Lady Gerton had managed it most diplomatically, but no one person can slay another without pain. Ruth was very gentle and attentive to her. The sweetness of her voice,—the exceeding beauty of her face had grown upon her. She felt kindly disposed towards her, but felt more sure that the girl worshipped the handsomeman who m her cousin loved. They talked of the farm at first, —of the birds, the poultry. Lady Gerton was quite interested in these matters. Then of the work to be done. And had they not found taking a lodger had been a great addition to their work? Poor Bonnie Doon! She had no more chance than a tortured bird under the dissecting knife. How beautiful to be able to talk of him,—above all, to one who knew him! All her beautiful secret,—all her passionate love flushed in her face and shone in her eyes as she told how everything done for him was a pleasure,—no work, no toil, but a pleasure,—and Lady Gerton fully believed it.

"You do not often see men of Mr. St. John's class here, I should imagine?" she said.

And Bonnie Doon told her, with the light of love shining in her eyes, that there was no one like him,—that in all her life she had seen no one like him.

"He has spent a good deal of time with you, no doubt?" she said.

And Bonnie Doon told her how he liked to see the pigeons fed, and how he helped always to gather the fruit.

The wise woman of the world smiled to herself as she listened It was just as she had suspected, just as she had thought, and once more she congratulated herself that they had come in time. Every word from the girl's lips, every flush of her beautiful face,—every quiver of the perfect lips,—every break in the tender voice,—every gleam in the blue eyes told the same story. She loved him with all her heart.

By dint of most adroit questioning, so managed as not to alarm her, Lady Gerton elicited something like the truth—that Eric's time had been spent with her, and that she—ah well, little need to tell how much she loved him.

"Do you think," said Lady Gerton, facing her suddenly, "that this companionship of a handsome and accomplished gentleman has been a good thing for you? You are very sensible, but it would have made some girls quite dissatisfied with men of their own ideas."

And Bonnie Doon only smiled. This grand lady, who spoke with such haughty composure of "men of her class," did not know that her lover had clasped her in his arms, and had called her his "beautiful love."

Lady Gerton looked at the beautiful, happy face. Time was passing. She must give the death wound soon—soon. They were going back to town to-night, and the drive was a long one. She had brought her there to break her heart and it must be done.

Wait until they reached the shade; it would seem doubly cruel out here in the sun. Wait, too, until they reached the garden chair, the rustic bench that answered as such.

"Will you rest?" said Lady Gerton. "I am tired; I am not used to these long walks," and Ruth sat down by her side on the pretty rustic bench that Laurence Rainton had helped to place there.

The time had come, but it was a woman's hand that held the sword, and that woman drew back and faltered.

It must be done. While the beautiful blue eyes looked round on the smiling scene, she prepared her words.

"I am very glad," she said, "to find Mr. St. John so much better. I take great interest in him, because Lady May is my cousin."

She might have spoken Greek for all that Bonnie Doon understood. Lady Gerton looked at the sweet unconscious face; the light of love and happiness was still there. This time the blow must be decisive.

"Lady May Carleton and Mr. St. John have been engaged for some time," she said. "They will be married early in the next year; that makes her so anxious."

It had fallen; there was a strange silence. Lady Gerton turned her head aside as though she were watching the blue pigeons. She meant in all kindness to give the girl time to recover herself; the silence was broken. She was afraid to turn round and look at her—as one is afraid to look on the face of a murdered man—and the silence grew deeper, stronger: it seemed even to worldly Lady Gerton that the very air around her throbbed and thrilled with pain. The kindest thing after all would be to talk on as though there was nothing extraordinary in her words.

"The marriage would have taken place at the end of this year," she continued, "but for this unfortunate illness; but I hope Mr. St. John will soon be in perfect health again."

Oh, Heaven! it was enough—enough! A great gasping sigh came from the white lips, and then Lady Gerton turned slowly to the girl. To the day of her death she will never forget the terrible change; all the color had died away from it; there was none left in the trembling lips; the light had gone from the blue eyes; the whole face was full of black, indescribable anguish and despair; the sword had gone home.

Lady Gerton's heart shrank, worldly wise though she was, when she saw the white despair of that young face. She went on talking, hoping that Ruth would recover herself, but no sound, after that one gasping sigh, came from the white lips.

Lady Gerton began to feel alarmed. What if really she had injured the girl? But then, she had done right—she ought to know. It was not fair; Eric St. John was Lady May's lover, and this flirtation was not fair or just to her in the least. So Lady Gerton sat silent for a few minutes, then she said, as if the matter were not of the least moment,—

"I will go and gather a few of those late roses."

She knew well that the girl could neither stand nor walk.

"She will recover more quickly alone," said Lady Gerton to herself, as, with a few smiling words, she went away and left her.

Alone, with her anguish and despair! At first she cried out that it could not be; that he belonged to her; that he was hers, and hers alone; he had called her his beautiful love! his dear love! How could he marry this magnificent Lady May—how could he? She could feel the warmth and sweetness of his caresses even now. It was only a few hours since he had held her in his arms, had kissed her face and whispered to her those words which had bound her to him for evermore. "Marry Lady May," It was impossible that he could love her. She remembered the expression of his face when she hastened to tell him that Lady May was there. He had not looked pleased, far from it; he had looked rather distressed than otherwise. How could it be?

Then she reminded herself that Lady Gerton would not have said such a thing unless it had been true. She would have no motive in it; because, of course, she did not know that Lady May's lover was her lover. Her heart died within her. Lady Gerton would surely never have told such a thing unless it was true. To be married early in the year, and she had been happy so short a time.

She felt like one who had received a sudden blow; a strange, dreadful chill came over her. Suddenly her life seemed ebbing away, and a dark cloud hid her—her head felt giddy, a merciful insensibility came for a short time over her, but when she opened her eyes again, it was only to a renewal of her pain.

Married early next year! and yet he had called her his beautiful love. If she had but died while she lay in his arms.

How long she sat there in that trance of pain Bonnie Doon never knew; but when she remembered how time was passing, and that her mother must want her, she tried to rise and go back to the house. But her head was giddy, and she could not walk—she must sit still for some time longer yet.

She sat there, her beautiful young face ghostly in its pallor. She was more like a marble statue than a living woman.

The tame birds and the blue pigeons came fluttering round her, but she neither saw nor heard them.

A blood red mist was before her eyes, a noise like the surging of strong waters filled her ears.

"Married early next year!" The words seemed to ring through her bones—seemed to paralyse her—they were death bells, for the heart of Bonnie Doon was broken.

CHAPTER XIII.

How long was it since Lady Gerton had left her? The blue pigeons were circling round her; the sunlight lay low on the trees; time had not stood still.

She rose to go back to the house; she had but one idea; it was to creep away to hide her face and die. At first she could not walk, she groped her way like one suddenly blinded; then she reached the stone courtyard and went up to her own room. She met Mrs. Vaughan on the stairs, who looked up in wonder at her white, dazed face.

"What is the matter, Ruth?" she asked, quickly.

The girl looked at her mother with eyes that did not seem to understand.

"Ruth," cried Mrs. Vaughan, "what is the matter with you?"

"I have a headache that almost blinds me," she replied.

"That is a sunstroke; I knew the sun was too hot for you. How those fine ladies can sit out in the heat of an August afternoon, I cannot think; I wish they had stopped away. Why, Ruth, my dear, you are as white as the driven snow,—and you tremble. Go to your own room and lie down, I will come to you when these fine, tiresome ladies are gone."

She did not add that Eric St. John was going too; she took it for granted that her daughter knew all about that.

Bonnie Doon bent down and kissed her mother's face; her lips were as cold as ice, and they were never to be warmed by her lover's kiss again.

"Ruth, I am sure you are ill," said Mrs. Vaughan, anxiously. "Kate Barberry had a sunstroke last year, and she was ill for months."

"I shall be well in a few hours, mother," she said, faintly; then she flung herself on her bed—to rest.

The very word was a mockery. How could she rest, with that passionate pain beating in her heart and brain?

This morning she had lain in his arms, he had kissed her face, he had called her "his beautiful love;" to-night she heard that he was going to be married early next year.

This morning, in the spring of her glad and happy young love, she had not thought of any barrier between them. She had not remembered his position and her own; she had only remembered that she loved him, and he loved her. But if he was going to marry this magnificent Lady May, he must be far removed from her.

She did not mistrust him; she did not say to herself that he had deceived her. A great black, funeral pall had fallen over her, and hid from her even her own thoughts.

The bright afternoon had passed now, and the ladies began to feel anxious over the drive.

"We must start; Eric," said Lady May; "I should not like to be late, and I should hardly think that the night air is good for you."

But he would not go without seeing Ruth. He left the ladies in the little green drawing-room, and went in search of her; but there was no trace of Bonnie Doon, nor could he hear any sound of her voice.

If he had known what Lady Gerton told her, he would have understood, and would have known what message to send her; he never dreamt of it, he was clever enough, but not so clever as a worldly woman. Not finding her, he went into the kitchen, where Mrs. Vaughan was lamenting his departure, and there he asked for Ruth.

"I cannot go away without seeing her and thanking her," he said; "she has been so very good to me."

"I am very sorry, Mr. St. John," said the farmer's wife, "you cannot see Ruth; she is ill."

"Ill!" he repeated; "she was well enough this afternoon."

"She went out, sir, with one of the ladies, and the afternoon was very hot; I am afraid she has a sunstroke."

"A sunstroke!" he repeated. "I hope not. Why should she? She is accustomed to being out in the sunshine."

"She came back here as white as the driven snow, with a headache that blinded her, and she trembled so that she could hardly stand. That looks like sunstroke."

"It does certainly," he replied. "You must have a doctor for her, Mrs. Vaughan."

"I shall take good care of her, you may be sure, sir. Ruth is the light of our life!"

Still he could not endure the thought of going away without seeing her. Sweet Bonnie Doon!

"Are you sure, Mrs. Vaughan," he asked, "that I cannot see her? If she knew that I was going away, she would want to see me I am sure."

"She does know, sir," said Mrs. Vaughan quite thought she was speaking the truth. "She knows, but I am sure she could not come down; she is not well enough."

It was a horrible disappointment to him. He stood quite still, wondering what he could do or say. He could not endure the thought of leaving her,—of going away without one word of good-bye, one kiss of the sweet face. Even at the last moment; while the horses were put to the carriage and the ladies were dressing,—even then, he would have refused to go, he would have said that he had changed his mind, but that he actually dreaded the comments of the two ladies, and had some vague fear that it would affect Bonnie Doon.

"Will you take a message from me to Miss Vaughan?" he asked.

"That I will sir," was the simple reply.

"Tell her from me that I;—I am most grateful to her; that while I live I shall never forget her kindness to me. Tell her I shall come back to the farm in the course of a few days, if it be only to see you all for an hour or two. Tell her from me that I shall send her some little token of my gratitude. Tell her also how grieved I am not to see her."

Mrs. Vaughan gave the message most carefully, the only words she omitted were the most important in it. She forgot to say that he would be sure to return.

After he had given the message, still Eric St. John stood very disconsolate.

"Mrs. Vaughan," he said suddenly, "I have never made Ruth a present, and I owe her more than I can ever repay; what shall I send her?"

"Whatever you are kind enough to choose."

"Eric, Eric," interrupted an impatient voice, "are you ready? Where are you? We shall be too late; do come. What can you be doing?"

At first he felt inclined to rebel, and say that he would not come, no matter what happened. Then at the thought of the two ladies, of all they would say, of the continual irritation, above all, if they should be inclined to lay the blame on Bonnie Doon. If women were jealous and angry, he knew they did not stop at a trifle. He must go.

"You will not forget my message," he said hurriedly.

"I will not forget," replied Mrs. Vaughan, and she did not, only she omitted the principal part of the message which told that he should return.

Then came the confusion of parting and starting. The farmer came up to wish "the lodger" farewell.

"I am leaving you somewhat hurriedly," said Eric, "but I shall come back in the course of a few days to see how you are." And Lady May, who heard him, determined that he should not do any such thing. The people had been very kind to him, that was certain, but there would be no need for him to keep up the acquaintance.

Mrs. Vaughan stood weeping by the carriage door. She was sorry to part from the kindly gentleman who had been a small gold mine to them.

"Not a very cheerful scene," said Lady Gerton, as the carriage drove away, but Eric did not hear her; in his heart he was crying for Bonnie Doon.

As the carriage rolled along, and the two ladies sank into a luxurious content, he was saying to himself how soon he would go back—in a few days. If he could have seen her, and said good-bye, he would not have felt the separation half so much; but to leave her ill, without a word of farewell, it seemed to him horrible. Lady May wondered what made her lover so silent. Lady Gerton, watching him keenly, knew well what was wrong, and she repeated to herself that they had not come one day too soon.

It was not the most cheerful of drives. Eric was wretched; he could not forgive himself now for having left the farm; he said to himself that he ought to have waited, above all, when he heard that Ruth was ill.

But then, what can one man do between two strong-minded and determined women? He would go back in three days, and he would make up his mind then as to the future.

But his thoughts were so full of her that he could not talk, and Lady May was just a little inclined to resent it. He ought to try to be a little more cheerful, when she had been gracious enough to fetch him home—but Lady Gerton understood.

After a long drive, the stately mansion in Queen's Gardens was reached at last. Lady Gerton was one of the most kindly and cheerful of hostesses, and certainly life at a West-end mansion was different to life in a large, rambling old farmhouse; but love reigned at the old farmhouse, and he liked love best.

The magnificent rooms, the recherche dinners, the sparkling wines, the evening dresses and jewels of the ladies, were no novelties to him; but in his heart he longed for the simple fashions of Laroh Hill. Both ladies were everything that was most kind to him; but in his heart he was longing for love. If he had never seen Bonnie Doon, he would never have known what love was, but, having once known it, he longed for it as the best thing in life. The whole world seemed changed to him; those things which he had valued most before, seemed to him of least value now. What was fame, ambition, or anything else compared with love? The only point on which his mind rested was this—that he should return in the course of a few days.

Early the next morning he went out and purchased a gold locket, rich, massive, and elegant; he placed his own portrait inside it, made it up in a parcel and addressed it to,—

Miss Vaughan,
Larch Hill Farm,
Aspendale.

Then for the first time since he left her, he felt something like at ease. He knew how delighted she would be, and with it he wrote a letter.

In this letter he called her his own Bonnie Doon, and he told her he was coming back to the farm very soon to see them, and to explain his hasty departure to her.

He hoped she was better, and he sent her his dearest love, then he felt more at ease still. Time would fly, and he should soon be with her again.

CHAPTER XIV.

Eric St. John had reckoned without his host, when he thought that in a few days he should be able to do what he liked and go where he would. Lady Gerton, whose interest in her cousin was quite from motives of affection, noticed the restless manner of her lover. There was but one thing for it, and that was to keep his attention fully engaged and his time fully occupied, then, in the course of a few days, he would forget all about this nonsense, and all would be well again.

She carried out her resolve. She invited people of distinction to meet him—people whom she knew he would be pleased to meet,—people who could be useful to him; but her great triumph was when [illegible] celebrated Judge, Lord Hawton, [illegible] with them, and Lady Hawton [illegible] invitation for all three,—Lady Gertrude, Lady May, and Eric. She took the greatest liking to all three. She was going down to their country house, where Lord Hawton had invited a party for grouse shooting, and she begged of them to go with her.

"Lord and Lady Carstairs are coming," she said. "We can travel from London together. We shall form a pleasant party."

At first Eric rebelled. He did not want to go. The only thing he cared for was to return to Larch Hill. But Lady Gerton remonstrated with him.

"What would you think," she asked, "of a courtier who declined the most gracious invitation that a Queen could give him? What do you think of a barrister whom a Judge especially favors, refusing those honors? Mr. St. John, you are a simpleton!"

"You must go, Eric," said Lady May. "Lady Hawton knows that we are to be married next year, and it will be a slight to me if you do not go. We shall not be there many days, and I see no reason for your refusal. Have you one to give?"

No, he had none, except the one in his own mind—his desire to return to Larch Hill, even were it only for an hour or two. He pictured to himself the wrath of Lady Gerton and Lady May when they knew he had declined an important invitation for that. Better to go to Lord Hawton's, and to the farm on his return.

Then he admitted to himself that he had not quite made up his mind as to the future—whether it was to be ambition or love, whether it was to be false to Lady May, and true to Bonnie Doon.

His heart and his head were in dire conflict; his head told him how plainly the lines of life were laid down for him; that he had but to marry Lady May and he would soon be one of the first men in England. It is not the first time in the annals of human nature that ambition has striven with love. Altogether, he thought to himself, it would be as well if he waited some little time; he should have leisure for thought, calm reason and reflection.

A few days could not matter; Bonnie Doon had his present and his letter. He wondered just a little why he had received no answer, and it never occurred to him that he had sent no address.

So he went to Lord Hawton's, and between the shooting and engagements of different kinds the days passed swiftly. He met another eminent dignitary at Lord Hawton's, who pressed him to go to his country house, where the shooting was supposed to be fine; he went. Then Lady May was going to Oakham Court, and he was invited to join her—that invitation he could not refuse.

So the long days passed, and as yet he had not made up his mind. Should it be love and Bonnie Doon, or ambition and Lady May? The matter at issue was too great for any rash decision, and he thought all was right with Bonnie Doon; he did not know that anyone had spoken to her of Lady May.

One engagement led to another, and he was astonished to find that three weeks had passed as quickly as a dream. He was slowly making up his mind, and it seemed to him that love and not ambition would be his choice, for his thoughts were filled with Bonnie Doon,—his longing was always for her; but there was no immediate cause for hurry, and he wanted plenty of time.

All life turns on trifles; it is trifles and not great events that shape our course. If, in this letter that he sent Bonnie Doon, he had enclosed his address, the chances are that she would have written to him,—that her letter would have been so full of sorrow and love, nothing would have tempted him to stay away. As it was, he sent no address. He did not know that Bonnie Doon knew of his engagement; he did not know that she was in the very depths of anguish and despair because she had been told that he was to be married early next year. If he had known or guessed this, he would have left the Queen herself to have gone to her.

In the meanwhile the tragedy deepened at Larch Hill Farm. When the carriage had driven away, Mrs. Vaughan went up to Ruth's room. The girl lay with her face hidden on the pillow, and the mother heard the long-drawn bitter sobs before she opened the door.

"Ruth," she said, "why you are crying my dear. Is your head worse?"

"It is no better," she replied. "Oh, mother! are they gone, those terribly fine ladies?"

"Poor child!" thought the kindly mother; "they have tried her to death, besides giving her a sunstroke."

"Yes, my dear," she replied. "I could almost find it in my heart to say, 'Thank Heaven they are gone.' But Ruth, my dear, I am concerned over you. I have never seen you so ill."

"I shall be better soon," said Ruth. "I am tired."

She had just begun to comfort herself with the thought that when the ladies were gone, she would go to him and ask him—ask him if it were true that he was going to be married early next year. If it were true, he would have something to tell her, something to explain. If it were false, he would take her to his arms once more and call her his dear love.

She would summon up all her courage and go to him, he would be in the little green drawing-room, and she would ask him was it true or not. As the first great shock of pain passed away, a faint glimmering hope awoke in her heart that, after all, it was not true; he had never spoken of Lady May to her, or inferred in any way that he was going to be married.

She would not quite believe it. If he did not love her, why need he have pretended to do so?

"I am glad they are gone," said Ruth. "Mother, is Mr. St. John in the drawing-room? I want to speak to him. If my head gets just a little better, I will go to see him."

"Mr. St. John!" cried Mrs. Vaughan, "why Ruth, I thought you knew he went with them."

"Went with whom mother?" she asked.

"Why, with the two ladies, I thought you knew."

Gone with them; gone with Lady May whom he was to marry early next year!

There was a long silence after the words. Life seemed all ended to Bonnie Doon; there was nothing left to think for, hope for, or wish. She lay quite still, spoke no word, she did not raise her hands or her eyes; but though her heart and brain were paralysed, the chill of despair made the feeble form tremble. The thing of which she was most conscious was a terrible pain as though her heart were breaking, a pain that was like the wound of a sharp knife. She tried to cry out, but she had no voice, no power of raising it.

Not understanding the silence, her mother came to her bedside.

A distinguished Physiologist has said that Neuralgia is the cry of the hungry nerves for their special food, which is the phosphorous contained in the blood. This painful disease is usually followed by general prostration on account of the great waste of nerve tissue and insufficient supply of nerve force to maintain the functions of the vital organs. The common cause of neuralgia and Rheumatic Pains is depraved Nutrition arising from Derangements of the stomach, Mal-assimilation of Food, and Poor Blood. Dr. Wheeler's Compound Elixir of Phosphates and Calisaya supplies Phosphorous for the nervous system, Lime as an exsistant of nutrition, Iron for the blood, and Calisaya for promoting strength. No preparation in existence is so reliable to maintain the vital forces and energize all the organs and tissues of the body.

One sees little anywhere from a railway carriage, and when the country is pretty much of a dead level, covered with a uniform hot dark brass, green of russet, according to the time of the year, the view from the window soon ceases to interest, and one regrets that he missed the 200 miles of it during the night. And we learn as little by hearing as by seeing. The information picked up by the way, chiefly in the odd minutes at stations, is not of the most reliable nature; and no where is it so difficult to get at the truth as in the northwest on either side of the boundary line. Of course, it is part of every man's religion that the country, and his section in particular, must be crowed up. And when you point to indifferent crops, or tell of hardships your friends have encountered, or drawbacks undeniably connected with the northwest, these are at once put down to some malign genius indifferently known as "the government," or "the syndicate," or "the banks." A man with these to fall back upon is armed at all times. He has a complete Ready Reckoner, and is saved the trouble of thinking, while he has the comfort of knowing that somebody—against whom he has no personal ill-will—is to blame for every calamity. His casual judgment is satisfied, and at the same time his patriotism and self-respect are preserved intact. Fortunately, I was not dependent for information on the only sources open to flying visitors. I had visited the country three times and spent several weeks chiefly in farmers' houses, and had learned something of the hard facts of the case. It is no use blinding our eyes to the truth that the sun of the northwest has its spots. Ten or eleven years ago I could get few to believe that there was anything good there. Two years ago few would allow that there was anything bad. By and by we shall understand that like every other country it is a mixture of good and bad. We may be thankful for enormous areas of good land, vast fertile plains that shall be an inheritance for our children's children, unless we go on barring strangers—in mercy to them—to come and labor on the possession of 160 acres apiece, without necessarily knowing that it is better than Ontario or Nova Scotia. I, for one, would be very thankful for another Ontario. The northwest has many disadvantages. The one that will be felt most sorely for many a day was the "boom" of two years ago that unsettled values and demoralized the people. Floods, grasshoppers, early frosts, monopolies and chameleon land policies have been small evils compared to the drinking and gambling, the rage for speculating engendered, the laying out of imaginary town sites and consequent cheating by wholesale, the formation of wildcat companies, the fictitious values everywhere, the attempt to build up towns before there was any country to support them, and all the other evils connected with the craze to get money suddenly, to get it without working and to get it at other people's expense. Gray-haired men seemed to lose not only their old-fashioned honesty, but their senses. They talked as if half a million or a million people could be poured into a country by one road in a year or five or six months, and a wilderness of stubborn glebe turned into the garden of the Lord by affixing names to town sites and locating railway stations. The settlement of the northwest will take time, and the more time it takes the better for the country in the end. Intending settlers, too, had better make up their minds to endure hardships or stay at home, for they need not expect to escape what has been, and always will be, the fate of the average immigrant. The men who made Ontario and the other older provinces were made of the right stuff. So are the men who have settled in Minnesota and Dakota, hardy Norwegians, Swedes, Welshmen, Canadians, who lived at first on potatoes and milk, and were blind to the necessity of completing railways before they had obtained patents for homesteads. The change wrought by them on the appearance of these prairie states in ten years is marvelous. Men of the same stamp have gone into our northwest, and unless we flood the country with a baser sort, like will draw to like. But it cannot be told too plainly that for years to come nobody need go to the northwest but workers, and that almost the only workers needed are farmers. There is hardly any honest way of making a living there except by taking it out of the ground.—Rev. Principal Grant in The Week.

"Why didn't I go to her assistance?" said the man who staid in bed while his wife laid out a burglar. "Young man, I've had a number of tussles with the old gal, and I knew that burglar had trouble enough without my giving him any."

Rescued at Last.

W. H. Crocker, druggist of Waterdown, says, when all other remedies fail for Bowel Complaints then Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry comes to the rescue. 29-2t

A bird dealer wrote upon his window: "For sale, a parrot speaking two languages." A purchaser came in. "What language does your parrot speak?" "French, monsieur." "French! That's very well; and what other language?" "His own."

A Field of Corns.—Thomas Sabin, of Eglington, says: "I have used Holloway's Corn Cure with the best results, having removed ten corns from my feet. It is not a half way cure or reliever, but a complete extinguisher, leaving the skin smooth and clear from the least appearance of the corns."

"What is the color of that lace you have on?" asked a go-out-between-the-acts youth of a young lady at the theatre. "It is coffee-tinted," she replied. "Do you think it is becoming?" he inquired. "Well, I can't say; but I know it matches your breath."

A young man who had been going with a Vermont girl for some time, and had made her several presents, asked her one day if she would accept a puppy. He was awful mad when she replied that her mother had told her, if he proposed to her, to say no.

The following notice of a singer appears on a programme of the day: "She is a Crichton in language, a Catherine Hayes in melody, a Parepa Rosa in sacred song, and an Arabella Goddard on the piano, while she is a cousin of the Rev. Dr. Kiernan, of St. Charles Borromeo's College, Overbrooke, Pa.

First Philadelphia male cynic, aged 18: "I am getting awfully tired of society. Nothing but conversation and dancing." Second M. C., aged 17: "Y-a-a-s; awfully tire-some." Girl from the West: "I suppose it isn't well for you to talk too much, but your legs ought to be strong at your age."

Scene; Village in Stirlingshire, in which two churches—Free and Established—glare at each other from opposite sides of the way. Tourist to native—"Your people must be very religious? Why, small as the village is, you have a pair of churches." Native—"Deed, mon, they're no sae godly as you wud think. It's mair spite than religion."

Farmers and Horse-Owners, Attention.

The American Horse Powder has proved its just claim to a place in the front rank of Condition Powders. As a food and general medicine for Horses and Cattle merits its are unexcelled. For sale at the City Pharmacy, George street, Peterborough. J. D. Tully, Chemist and Druggist. 16-tf

A little chap who fell on the pavement in front of the Woodward avenue grocery the other day and broke a jug, jumped up and called out to a boy on the corner: "Isn't that boss?" Why, didn't you break the jug?" "Of course I did, but it was empty. If I'd only waited five minutes I'd have lost a hull gallon of 'lasses by the breaking. Bet your boots I'm allus lucky!"

Imitators vs. Substitutes.

Good points are worth remembering, for the reason that they assist us in avoiding many discomforts, and protect us against the cupidity of overreaching people. When you learn from friends that Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor is safe, prompt and effectual, don't allow druggists to palm off a worthless and perhaps poisonous substitute. His object is quite patent. He wishes to make a few cents difference between a good article and a cheap imitation or substitute. Putnam's Corn Extractor. Sold everywhere. Beware of dangerous imitations. Polson & Co., proprietors, Kingston.

Effie (to Mrs. Belweather, who has just been speaking to Mr. B.)—"Why, Mrs. Belweather, I thought you hadn't any husband?" Mrs. B.—"Why, of course I have, Effie. Do you mean to say you don't know Mr. Belweather?" Effie—"Yes, but I didn't suppose he was your husband. I thought you hadn't any. Papa said you married for money, and that was all you got."

The world moves so fast that one learns not to be astonished at anything. Still, we confess, that to hear of a post-office being established on Mount Sinai compels us to revise our ideas regarding the fitness of things. The pious monks of Jabel Katerin have hitherto been regarded as holy anchorites, whose minds had long ago become weaned from the vanities of the world. But it is evident, from their desire to share in the somewhat qualified blessings of the Postal Union, that they have found a continuous contemplation of the Mountain of Moses less satisfying than they had been led to expect.

Low Prices For Butter.

The New York Tribune in its market report, explained why some butter is sold for such low prices. In speaking of butter it said: "Light colored goods are very hard to dispose of and several lots were thought well sold at 8 to 10 cents." If butter makers would get the top price, they should use the Improved Butter Color, made by Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington Vt. It gives a pure dandelion color and never turns red, or rancid but tends to improve and preserve the butter.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY CROWDED.

The friends of Sir Bartle Frere, the distinguished English statesman whose recent death is greatly lamented, having sought permission to inter the remains in Westminster Abbey, were met with a reluctant reluctant refusal. The Dean of Westminster, in declining the application, said that he was bound, as custodian to the Abbey, to watch with increasing jealously the small space yet remaining for the interment of illustrious Englishmen within the walls, and while he fully shared in the high respect which was due to the deceased for his eminent public services, he was unable, nevertheless, to give space for a grave.

Itching Piles—Symptoms and Cure.

The symptoms are moisture, like perspiration, intense itching, increased by scratching very distressing, particularly at night, seems as if pin-worms were crawling in and about the rectum: the private parts are sometimes affected. If allowed to continue very serious results may follow. "SWAYNE'S OINTMENT" is a pleasant, sure cure. Also for Tetter, Itch, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Erysipelas, Barbers' Itch, Blotches, all scaly, crusty Skin Diseases. Box by mail 50 cents; three for 1.25. Address, Dr. SWAYNE & SON, Phila., Pa. Sold by Druggists. 1-52t

The older Weller's warning to Samivel to "beware of the vidders" would seem particularly pertinent to all England just now. The latest census shows that at the close of the year 1881 there were in England and Wales more than 1,000,000 widows, with Scotland and Ireland to hear from. The same returns exhibit not one-half that number of widowers, so that a solution of difficulties does not readily present itself. And what makes the situation more appalling is the statistical statement that nearly 60,000 of these widows are under 35 years of age. Marrying men, even widowers, will want to know how these million widows managed to dispose of their husbands. More particular inquiry throughout the kingdom for the late census seems to have come to a standstill; but it was "estimated" that the number of widows in Scotland and Ireland was three times that of the widowers.

Quack Advertisements

Are rapidly becoming a nuisance, and we think it behoves publishers to examine into the merits of many articles puffed up in their columns. We do not deny that many meritorious remedies are properly to be classed under this heading. Take the hundreds and thousands relieved by the use of Polson's Nervilline, would it not be unreasonable to expect them to condemn that far famed remedy? Now we know for a fact that Polson's Nervilline is without exception the most powerful, pleasant and certain remedy in the world for pain. It cannot fail, for it goes right to the bottom of pain, penetrates to the nerves soothes them into quietness, and affords prompt and permanent relief. Nervilline is sold by all druggists. Sample only 10 cents. Try it.

WITCHES AND MATRIMONY.

The Sanitary Record is responsible for the statement that, in 1770, the following edict was solemnly passed and duly registered in France under Louis XV: "Whosoever, by means of red or white paint, perfumes, essences, artificial teeth, false hair, cotton wool, iron corsets, hoops, shoes with high heels, or false hips, shall seek to entice into the bonds of marriage any male subject of his Majesty shall be prosecuted for witchcraft and declared incapable of matrimony." Did such an edict prevail in this country, I am afraid, judging from recent observations in the park, that the majority of our family mansions would have to be turned into "homes for witches."

"THE WOMAN'S PHYSICIAN."

A common sense medical work for ladies only. Fully answers all questions which modesty prevents asking a male physician. Gives causes and symptoms of all diseases of the sex, with positive cure for each in plain language written by ladies who have made these diseases a life study. A plain talk in delicate language which every woman, young or old, should read. It is recommended by many eminent lady physicians as a safe guide for the sex. Handsomely bound and illustrated. Sent post-paid for $1.00. Address the Rochester Publishing Co., 32, 33 & 33½ Osburn Block, Rochester, N.Y. 12-26t

An End to Bone Scraping.

Edward Shepherd, of Harrisburg, Ill., says: "Having received so much benefit from Electric Bitters, I feel it my duty to let suffering humanity know it. Have had a running sore on my leg for eight for eight years; my doctors told me I would have to have the bone scraped or leg amputated. I used, instead, three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and my leg is now sound and well." Electric Bitters are sold at fifty cents a bottle, and Bucklen's Arnica Salve at 25c. per box by Taylor & Macdonald.

A Welcome Home.

On Thursday evening Rev. Mr. Tovell, pastor of George street Methodist church arrived in town and the members of his flock gave him and Mrs. Tovell an elaborate and cordial welcome to their new home. A large number of the congregation chiefly ladies, of course, who are always foremost in every good work, assembled at the parsonage and laid an excellent collation. The repast was followed by a very pleasant evening's social enjoyment.

Baseball.

A member of the Peterborough baseball club wishes us to say that the statement, published in our last issue, and which we received from a reliable source, to the effect that several members of the Peterborough club had joined the Silver Stars, was incorrect. It is asserted that only one member left the Peterboroughs and joined the Silver Stars, and that one not the catcher. The Peterboroughs are in fine trim, practising for the return match with the Silver Stars.

Worth Knowing.

While prices are generally high all over the country it is refreshing to learn that at least one store in Peterborough has placed prices to suit the times. At China Hall you can buy a handsome glass set, 6 pieces, for 25 cents, a handsome butterdish for 10cts., a large complete for 25cts., six chimneys for 25cts., white tea set, 44 pieces for $2.00; colored tea set, 44 pieces, $2.50; chamber sets from $1.00 up; half dozen nice goblets for 20cts.; handsome China tea sets from $4.50; best quality cruets only $2.50; knives, forks and spoons lower than ever. Do not fail to visit "China Hall," the palace store of Peterborough. 26-tf

A Welcome to His New Home.

The Orillia Packet contains the following in reference to the reception of Rev. John Shaw: "On Wednesday evening the Methodist school room was filled with persons anxious to give a hearty reception to the Rev. John Shaw, who had just arrived. The Rev. T. Williams opened the meeting with singing and prayer, after which Mr. T. H. Robinson took the chair and delivered a short address. Mr. T. M. Edmonson then in a very good speech welcomed the new pastor and his wife. Mr. Shaw replied in sensible, manly terms, bespeaking consideration for their being strangers in a strange place, assuring the assembly that he had never made one enquiry respecting the people, so that his knowledge must be self-earned. He expected to like his congregation, and hoped soon to be acquainted with all. Mr. Shaw speaks with much ease and distinctness, and does not look like a man who would be profitable to the doctors. Miss Wainwright and the members of the choir varied the proceedings with occasional music and singing.

Money.

Mr. John A Bennett, of Otonabee, is prepared to make loans on real estate and to purchase mortgages. Loans will be made at the lowest rates of interest, payable when the borrower deems the most convenient time, the principal, being payable at such times as may be agreed upon. Expenses are very light. 12-tf

A Hand Saw.

Michael Mallon, who has for some time been employed on the farm of Mr. Joseph Redmond, Otonabee, came to town on Thursday to "draw his pension." After the money had been secured, Mallon strayed into Hazlett's mill, where he had been formerly employed. While he was again attempting to use a circular saw, he being unsteady on his feet, slipped, and ran his right hand into the saw. The hand of course was terribly lacerated, and Dr. King assisted by Dr. Bell, amputated the injured member above the knuckles.

Walker's Rack Lifter.

Mr. Walker, inventor of this great convenience to the farmer, has received, among many others, the subjoined letter:—

"Mr. Peter G. Walker, Otonabee:

"DEAR SIR,—I have great pleasure in stating that the Rack Lifter recently placed in the barn on the 'Beaver Mead' farm by you comes up fully to your representations, and I have no doubt when known, it will soon find its way into the greater number of farms in the county. From the short experience I have had, I believe it only requires to be known to make it come into general use.

"T. G. HASLETT.

"Peterborough, July 9th, 1884."

Lacrosse Championship.

The first championship match of the season will be played on the grounds, Ashburnham, on Friday next, July 18th, between the "Checkers" of Beaverton and the Peterboroughs. The ball will be faced promptly at three o'clock, and a lively game may be expected, for the Checkers come to the scratch with an unbroken score of successes for this season, while the home team, in spite of the fluke against them at Brockville, are in good form and will show cause, in a vigorous manner, why the championship should not be taken from Peterborough. The band will be in attendance during the match. Admission to the grounds, 15 cents.

A Splendid Chance.

It will be seen by an advertisement in another column that Mr. D. W Dumble offers for sale a number of Building Lots in various parts of the town on ten years credit. No money down, interest only to be paid for first five years, and thereafter yearly instalments with the right to pay at any time as may suit the convenience of the purchaser. This offer enables a poor man to use his money in erecting a building, and so he gets rid of rent, and secures a home for himself. Building will be cheap this year and no doubt many will take advantage of this very liberal offer. Besides lots in town, Mr. Dumble offers a number of lots in Ashburnham, and several park lots on the same terms. Call at his office and see plans, &c.

Farmers, you will find Cottonades and and Shirtings, at bottom prices, at Turnbull's. An immense variety to choose from.

Our Share of the Grand Officers.

During the recent meetings of the different Masonic grand bodies in Toronto, Peterborough was honored by receiving the following elections and appointments:—At the meeting of the Grand Priory of the Knights Templar and Hospitallers of St. John, etc., Rev. V. Clementi, B.A., was elected Grand Prelate, and Mr. E. H. D. Hall appointed a member of the Grand Council. At the meeting of the Grand Council of the Royal and select Masters, Mr. E. H. D. Hall was elected Inspector-General for the North-West Territories division. At the annual meeting of the Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons, Dr. Frazer was elected District Superintendent for the Ontario district.

Thos. Kelly's Fire.

On Saturday night Mr. Thomas Kelly's dry goods store was visited with fire. The shop boy was lighting the gas in the northern show window, when some of the goods were accidentally set on fire, and in a moment the whole window, filled with festoons of laces, etc., was blazing. The fire was, however, put out without the help of the steamer or hydrants, but not before the contents of the window were injured by smoke, fire and water. Mr. Kelly's windows are among the neatest in town, and this one contained a large and valuable display of laces, dress goods, hosiery, etc. Some of these were destroyed, but others were only damaged, and these will be sold at greatly reduced prices. The loss, amounting to about $300, is covered by insurance.

An Italian Ruction.

Last Saturday morning—in the wee sma' hours—about one o'clock, a row took place in the Italian boarding house, Ashburnham. A dispute arose among the inmates regarding a matter of rent, and the disputants being Italians, the trouble did not end in a black eye or two, a chewed thumb or gnawed ear, but the rib-tickling knife was drawn and used to good effect. In the sticking tournament one man was stabbed pretty seriously in the abdomen, and others received gashes in the flesh of the arms and legs. The wounded combatants were attended to by Dr. Clarke, and will likely recover. The parties being entirely ignorant of the English language, it is hardly possible to obtain particulars of the manner in which the row occurred. One arrest has been made, but it is probable that no trial will take place if the wounded persons recover, which they are likely to do.

Mr. Robert Rowe purchased the residence on the church property, Brock street, for the sum of $250.

On Tuesday Mr. Charles Stapleton conducted the sale by auction of the Hall Estate property, with the following result:

Brick building west of Mr. R. Kingan's hardware store, sold to Mr. James Gallin, Lindsay, for $3,600.

Roughcast building next Halpin's hotel, sold to Mr. John Lynch for $2,500.

Brick building known as Halpin's Hotel, sold to Mr. M. Halpin for $3,000.

St. Luke's Sunday School propose holding their annual pic-nic and excursion over the O. & Q. R. R. to Norwood, on Wednesday next, the 23rd instant. Tickets at low rates on application to the committee, the S. S. teachers, or at the station.

The Trick Horse "Tommy."

The Toronto World states that the well-known Peterborough trained horse "Tommy," recently sold by Mr. Harry Winch to Mr. C. J. Smith, Toronto, is to be exhibited at the Toronto Zoo by his late owner and educator, Mr. Winch.

Baptist Church.

The Baptist Church trustees, finding that the present church is too small for the increasing congregations under the pastorate of Rev. Mr. Munro, have, we understand, three propositions under consideration—to enlarge the present church; build a new one; or purchase the "Bible Christian" Church, Murray street.

Murray Street Church Property.

At a joint meeting of the Trustees of the Murray, George and Charlotte streets Methodist churches, held Monday night, it was decided to sell the Murray-street Church property. It was divided into two parcels—the church and part of the lot; and the remainder of the lot and the parsonage. A figure, which is not made known, was placed upon the property.

A Potato Famine.

A potato famine in Peterborough can only be averted by the rapid ripening of the new crop. The supply of old potatoes is literally exhausted. A grocer tells us that it would be impossible to buy a single bag of old potatoes in any one shop in town. New potatoes begin to come in at the modest price of fifty cents per peck They are, however, rather small and contain about as much water as pic-nic lemonade.

Foresters' Excursion.

Owing to the impossibility of securing a steamer, the destination of the Foresters' annual excursion has been changed from Sturgeon Point to Orillia. A special train, leaving town at 7.45 a.m., on Thursday, July 24th, will convey the excursionists to Couchiching Park and Orillia. The Peterborough Lacrosse Club will also go up with the excursion and play a match game with the Orillias. This will be a fine day's outing. Round trip tickets only $1.00.

The Pulpit.

Rev. I. Tovell preached his first sermon in George-street church on Sunday morning, and Rev. Mr. F. McAmmond in the Methodist (late Bible Christian) Church, Ashburnham. The latter services were exceedingly satisfactory, and with the new pastor's great energy and ability, the standing of this church will in every way be improved. The organ and Sunday school library have been removed to the Ashburnham church from Murray street, and various improvements have been made, or are in contemplation.

Art Loan Exhibition.

The Y.M.C.A. are arranging for an exhibition of paintings, articles of vertu, and curiosities, to take place on the 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th of August. It is expected that part of the exhibit will be received from Montreal and Toronto. The committee having the matter in charge will esteem it a favor if any of our citizens having paintings or other rare articles, and who would be willing to lend them for the purposes of the exhibition, would notify the secretary.

Excursion to Norwood.

The Sunday School of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church will make its annual excursion to, and hold its annual pic-nic at Norwood on Tuesday next, July 22nd, by the O. & Q. Railway. The train will leave the station here at 11 o'clock a.m., and return early in the evening. This excursion will be sure to be well patronized, as it is the first over this road and to Norwood, and the Norwood people will do their best to have the pic-nic grounds in the best of order, and by a liberal hospitality to visitors, create a favorable impression of Norwood as a pic-nic resort.

The Lacrosse Boys at Brockville.

There is little to be added to the telegraphic announcement in our last issue of the disastrous defeat of the home club at Brockville in the match for a cup and medals. That Peterborough put a good team on the field is shown by the following list:—J. Giroux, goal; Percy Miles, point; M. Tierney, cover point; J. Howden, W. J. Scott and A. Yelland, defence field; J. Sheehy, centre field; R. Kelly, R. H. Fortye and C. Rutherford, home field; W. Rudkins, second home, G. Giroux, first home. The Mets put a strong, active team on the field. They rushed the game from the start. It must not not be thought that our boys stood still and let themselves be beaten. They made several dangerous assaults on the Ottawa flags, but a good defence kept them out of the game. Luck was against them. The ball only threatened Peterborough three times, but three times it went through. Besides, the grounds sloped greatly towards one end, and as Ottawa won the toss and, of course, elected to play down grade, our boys had for two games to play an up hill contest. Still, they do not deny they were fairly out-played; with a little more of the luck that enters into lacrosse they would not, however, have been downed so disastrously.

CONSOLATION.

The team, however, whacked the consolation of three straight games out of the Okas in the match they played at Belleville on Thursday on their return home.

ONTARIO & QUEBEC RAILWAY.

The Opening of the Road Postponed to the 28th July.

The managers of the Canadian Pacific Railway have decided to postpone the opening of the Ontario & Quebec sections of their road till Monday, the 28th inst., in order to afford themselves an opportunity of applying the fullest test possible as to the substantiality of that part of the road near Kaladar, where the engineering difficulties occurred. The managers express the fullest confidence that these difficulties have been finally overcome, but as such troubles have often been much more difficult to get rid of on other roads, they are anxious to apply the most powerful tests before sending regular passenger trains over the spot. They are now morally certain that no more delays will take place in the opening of the through route, and intend putting on two express trains each way daily between Toronto and Montreal.—Globe.

M. McFADDENS FURNITURE.

The Biography of a Bustling Business.

Among the many thriving industrial establishments of which Peterborough can boast, not the least important is the flourishing Furniture Manufacturing Establishment of Mr. M. McFadden. That it is one of our permanent and abiding industrial institutions, is shown by the fact that it is not an experimental venture, but the steady growth of years, developed to its present state, and standing by the determination of a constantly growing patronage; business that from small beginnings has fought its way to the front by the forces of enterprise and business tact.

THE PAST.

Eight years ago Mr. McFadden, who had learned his business, with Mr. A. Clegg, felt able to stand on his own feet, and believing that there was a living for him in the trade, established a modest little furniture shop in the premises now occupied by him. This was in 1876, and the shop rooms at that time were only 24x40 feet in area, while the manufacturing department consisted of a little "hand shop" in the rear 24x20 feet in size, and manned only by himself and one man. Though beginning business in the heart of the very "hard times" that then prevailed, Mr. McFadden by dint of hard work—often day and night—by attention to his business and the demands of his trade; by supplying a first class article of furniture; by giving good value for the money of customers and doing a square honest business, he met with success and made a tidy profit the first year. The next year he expanded his business by the addition of a hearse and a general undertaking department. Success followed industry and integrity, and soon the old "hand shop" was found inadequate to the demands of the enlarged business, and he established a manufacturing shop on Rogers' race Ashburnham, which is still in active operation. In 1882 he enlarged his premises on Hunter street by adding an extension 24x40 feet, (making his wareroom over all 65x24 feet,) and another annex 20x30 feet, for a hearse house and an upholstering department. The second story of this building is used as a finishing shop and for storing unfinished work as it comes from the factory; the third story, which extends over the whole building is used for a show room for caskets, coffins and undertaking goods and for storing surplus stock.

The manufacturing establishment over the river was also enlarged to four times its original size.

THE PRESENT.

This shop consists of two flats, 20x60 feet, and is equipped with the best and most improved machinery obtainable, and in it are done, in a most superior manner, not only all kinds of cabinet work required in Mr. McFadden's business, but planing and custom cabinet work, such as may be ordered. There is employed regularly a staff of twelve hands under the charge of a competent, careful and experienced foreman, Mr. Charles Huffman. Add to these the hands employed in the furnishing and upholstering shops at the warerooms and we have a staff of sixteen men regularly supplied with remunerative employment, compared to a staff of one man at the opening of the business in 1876, working by hand in a little hand shop 20x30 feet. Now, everything that is possible is done by machinery, and the result is neater, cheaper and more stylish furniture.

Mr. McFadden's stock is uncommonly complete. The customer in need of furniture will find at his large and handsome warerooms, blazing at night with the brilliancy of the electric light, beautiful parlour suites, bed room sets, dining room furniture, sideboards, chairs, hall racks, and, in fact, any and every article, in great variety at varying prices, commonly found in first-class furniture warerooms. The ordered work department is now especially well equipped. Upholstering is done in a most superior manner, and miscellaneous orders are filled with a promptitude and excellence such as might be expected from first-class workmen, the best material and the most complete mechanical appliances. All work is guaranteed the best in quality of material, workmanship, neatness, durability and style. The undertaking department is now complete. The hearse has been thoroughly refitted, and now contributes to as elegant an outfit for conducting the solemnities of funereal occasions as there is in the Province.

THE FUTURE.

Judged by the past, the future of Mr. McFadden's business is exceedingly bright. Since its beginning it has kept pace with the marvellous growth and improvement of the town; and the proprietor's enterprise is contemplating still further improvements. The present shop windows are to be taken out and replaced in the near future with elegant plate glass, and the front is to be generally touched up and improved. Mr. McFadden has not neglected one of the prime elements of business success—he has been a judicious but liberal advertiser, and fully appreciates the value of printer's ink as a means of reaching the public. If the past is used as a guide for judging of the future, there can be no question of even more flourishing days than ever for McFadden's furniture establishment. His establishment, the first furniture shop on Hunter street west of George street, is well worth a visit. You can't make a mistake, the only shop on Hunter street lit with electric light.

CHAMPIONSHIP LACROSSE.

The Checkers fail to Capture the Championship.

The Home Team Beat the Shamrocks Again with Ease—The Visitors only Get One Game out of Four.

There was a very large attendance of spectators on the Cricket grounds, Ashburnham, on Friday to witness the attempt of the "Checkers" of Beaverton, to capture from the Peterborough Lacrosse Club, the Medal, the emblem of the Championship of Central Ontario. The following is the composition of the teams:

Peterboroughs.		Checkers.
J. Giroux	Goal	F. McCrea
P. Myles	Point	D. McKinnon
M. Tierney	Cover Point	E. Davidson
J. Henderson	Defence Field	R. McMillan
J. Howden	" "	S. Weeks
R. H. Fortye	" "	C. Campbell
J. Sheehy	Centre Field	A. Ross
R. Kelly	Attack Field	M. C. Cameron
W. J. Scott	" "	A. K. Cameron
W. Kelly	" "	C. Cameron
W. Rudkins	2nd Home	W. Birchard
G. Giroux	1st Home	A. T. Birchard
J. Coughlin	Field Captain	L. J. Cameron
J. Simpson	Umpire	G. Rolling

Mr. G. Thompson Vice-President of the Orillia Lacrosse club, was brought down by the visitors as Referee.

THE FIRST GAME.

Pretty sharply on time, the centres Sheehy and Ross, knelt for the face. Sheehy, of course, secured the ball, and Howden sent it and sent it towards the Checkers' goal. Halpin's threw on goal but went behind. The ball getting in front of the goal, Scott made some neat play ending with a dangerous drop, neatly stopped by a Beaverton boy who transferred the ball and the fight to the other end of the field. But Henderson sent it back to Centre field, and Howden fishing the ball cleverly out of a scrimmage made a close shot on the Checkers' flags. After some varying play in which Howden and Tierney made good work, Myles got the rubber and making a splendid run down side field, put a well judged shot on goal, which was also well parried by Campbell, who, however lost the ball to Scott, who put it between the flags, thus securing the first game for Peterborough in 7 minutes.

THE SECOND GAME

was longer than all the other games together. On the start, as before, Beaverton's goal was first threatened, and continued to be so, pretty regularly and frequently till nearly the close of the game. In this game Henderson, Fortye, Sheehy and Kelly made some good playing, especially the two latter, and the Checkers' defence men, which, during this game, were composed of the majority of the team, were called on repeatedly to defend their flags. Then followed more field play in which Tierney's long straight shots, kept the danger near the visitors' goal. The defence game played by the Checkers naturally drew away the Peterborough defence from their goal. After 25 minutes play, the ball travelled down to the Peterborough goal, and Birchard of the Checkers put it between the flags.

THE THIRD GAME.

The loss of a goal put the home team more on the qui vive, though there was fine play on both sides. At length Kelly captured the ball in centre field and deftly tipped it to Howden, who transferred it to Rudkins, who put the rubber in the right place and won the second game for his team in six minutes.

THE FOURTH GAME.

This was the deciding game, and the fine team play of the Peterboroughs soon ended the suspense. On the face Sheehy passed the ball to Kelly, and these two had a little game of pitch and toss to themselves. To save a check Kelly tipped the rubber to Sheehy, and he, also being closely checked, sent it back to Kelly, who next made a fine run up the field, and made a drop on the flags, but it fell behind the goal, where Halpin secured it and dropped it in front. Billy Rudkins kept his eye on the ball, got it on his stick and passed it to George Giroux, who put it between the flags, thus winning the decisive game of the match in forty seconds.

In this contest the Checkers, though plainly over-matched, did some excellent individual play. The play throughout was good-natured, and no unnecessary or careless violence in checking was employed on either side. The Checkers pluckily asserted their intention of sending the Peterboroughs a challenge for another dash at the championship within the month.

The usual cheers followed the match, when the home club, headed by the band, escorted the visitors to the train.

A BOLD BURGLARY.

Peterborough Post-office Penetrated and Plundered.

A Dark Deed Deftly Done—The Midnight Marauders Make Way with about $2,000—The Vault Door Bored with Dynamite—No Clue Left.

About two o'clock on Friday morning last burglars gained an entrance to the Peterborough post-office building, and, going to work with dexterous skill, drilled a hole in the combination lock of the vault door, and at about half-past two o'clock inserted a dynamite cartridge in the lock and exploded it, shattering the lock into complete. But this did not allow the handle to draw the bolts back, and the burglars went to work to drill another hole on the left side of the door, near the edge, and as exactly over the middle of the upper bolt of the set as though measurement the most exact had been made. This allowed a centre punch or some similar tool to be used, the bolts were forced back and the rascals had access to the vault.

WHAT THEY FOUND.

Here they found a box containing about $1,400 worth of postage stamps, which they transferred to their pockets. They also found about—as nearly as can be ascertained—$1,043 in cash, consisting of $436 sent from Lakefield for deposit, but which, unfortunately for somebody, arrived after the banks had closed, $412 Government funds, $180 of Mr. Rogers' private funds, and $45 which had been taken for stamps. They also found a cabinet containing the registered letters, and the amount of these can only be conjectured. The burglars took these letters from the cabinet containing them, and, using it for a seat, coolly proceeded to tear the ends off the letters in the orthodox way, extract and pocket the money. Several cheques which were drawn payable to order were left behind, as containing elements of danger in the disposal of them. One cheque for $150, regularly endorsed by Strickland & Co., Lakefield, was lost by the burglars. We can assure them that they will be welcome to the cheque if they apply for it. The amount contained in the registered letters is, of course, an unknown quantity. The robbers were good judges of time-keepers. They left behind a galvanized gift watch, though they opened the box containing it. But they took away with them a watch addressed to Mr. R. W. Muncaster, and also a couple of valuable rings, leaving behind an odd earring and a plated brooch. Altogether, the spoil they secured must be in the neighborhood of $3,000.

HOW IT WAS WORKED.

On the arrival of the chief clerk, Mr. Dan. Barritt, at the post-office about six o'clock on Saturday morning, he was astounded to find the doors all opened and blacksmith tools scattered about the floor. A little search showed how the rascals got in. The alley in rear of the post-office, and leading to the back door, is easily accessible. Operating in this the burglars used a framing chisel to prise open the back door. Once in possession they took good precautions to secure avenues of escape in case of detection. The catch of the lock of the Brook street door was unscrewed, but the door held shut by a plug of paper. The George street door, leading into Mr. Roger's private office, was evidently unlocked with a false key.

THE TOOLS THEY USED

were identified as belonging to Porter Brothers' carriage shops, and consisted of a sledge hammer, cold chisel, punch, drill, brace and a quarter inch bit, and two chisels. These tools, which were used with good effect, as above described, were left lying as they were used.

The night was exceedingly favorable for the enterprise, being intensely dark. The noise of the explosion was heard by the housekeeper and bartender of the Little Windsor, who attributed it to the falling of a raised window sash, or other of the many sounds that occur at night about hotels.

"MATHIESON."

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—As a reader of THE EXAMINER I notice the item of last week entitled the "Hamlet of Havelock," and wish to correct an error asserted therein. The first settler was A. H. Bart, of Liverpool Market, (not Geo. Bart, of Whitby,) who seented speculation further than you were aware; so he had also farther to walk than you expected. He is happy to think he can get home now without having to walk most or all the way, and is very glad that Mr. Mathieson accepted the offer of the last clean hundred he had, for 250 of a population is quite encouraging, compared with the wilderness it appeared on his first arrival. I will also say that this place is to be called Mathieson, not Havelock, and if a post office is established we will all gladly call it Mathieson.

WILLOW AND WICKET.

The Match Between Toronto and Peterborough.

On Thursday a match game of cricket was played on the Ashburnham grounds between eleven representing the Peterborough and Toronto cricket clubs. Wickets were pitched at ten o'clock. Toronto went first to the bat, facing the bowling of Morley and Scantlebury, and succeeded in piling up 110 runs in good style—Boyd, 15; Foster, 14; Collins, 21; Atkinson 11, and Benjamin, 19, being the double figures. For so long an innings it is remarkable that there were only 8 extras, these being byes, showing that the bowling was pretty well on, and that the stone-step looked well after the rawhide. Morley's score at the wickets was five wickets and three maidens for 66 runs, and Stratton's, four stumps and two maidens for 45 tallies. Peterborough then went to the defence of their wickets, but with very bad luck. Stratton and Cooper made the first pair, but the latter took off his pad for a round 0, while the former went 1 better by putting the one before the cypher; the other wickets, however, fell rapidly for small scores, the best run-getters retiring for nothing or a small score, till Grundy took the bat and, by some very neat play, put together 22 points, and redeemed the home club from the necessity of following their own innings. The total at the fall of the last wicket was 69, to which extras contributed 17. In their second innings Toronto made the good total of 145 runs. Of this number all but three, two byes and a leg bye, were off the bat, showing sharp fielding. It is only fair to state that Boyd, who made nearly half the total, was out in the first over, as he admitted himself, after the innings, being cleverly caught by Grundy at the wickets; but the umpire, who did not see the catch, gave the batter the benefit of the doubt, which made a difference of about sixty in Boyd's score. Peterborough went to the bat with a score of 186 to overcome, but only succeeded in putting together 83, leaving them 103 short. The double figure men were Grundy (10) and Rogers. The latter's 33 were every one carefully played for and well-earned runs. The following is the score:

TORONTO.

1st Innings.		2nd Innings.

Grundy, not out	22	run out	10
Hamlin, b Boyd	0	not out	0
Hatton, b Boyd	0	b Boyd	4
Extras	17	Extras	9
Total	69	Total	83

The teams were pretty evenly matched all round. Toronto was luckier at the bat, while the fielding of the home team was excellent. Thus, the boundary hits, while helping the score of the visitors, prevented the Peterboroughs from profiting from the superiority in fielding, which they evidently possessed—in the long innings of 110 and 145 runs the home team only allowed the visitors 6 extras, while in the Peterboroughs' score of 150, the extras amounted to 26. In both second innings Peterborough played one man (Leader) short, and they had by no means their best team in the field, four of their best men being absent.

Why is Turnbull now offering large ranges of fresh goods at prices that will compete favorably with clearing sales? Because his goods are never marked over a fair living profit, which any reasonable customer is willing to pay. His steadily increasing trade enables him to clear out all lines in the proper season, also because his long experience and close attention to business put him in a position to secure any really desirable job lines which are sometimes thrown on the market.

SOUTH MONAGHAN.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

When I wrote you last the weather was extremely hot, but it has been succeeded by a cold wave that made overcoats, especially at nights, a welcome addition.

The dry weather still continues, but the coincident cool weather prevents its affecting the grain crops. We have had several fine showers which have helped the crops wonderfully.

The hay crop is nearly all saved, and, in excellent condition. It is of good quality and has yielded better than was expected.

Harvesting has begun, some fields of fall wheat and barley being ripe. The fall wheat will turn out well in this section, the cool weather giving it good time to fill. Barley is short in straw, some fields are thin, but on the whole, the crop will be an average one.

Peas oats and spring wheat are looking well.

Berry-picking parties have been the rage lately, scarcely a morning passing, without two or three rigs starting for the north with merry loads. They return at night with full pails.

Our Methodist friends' tea came off on July 1st, with great success, enough was made to pay interest on the church debt and management expenses for the year. A move was then made to wipe off the church debt, and in a few minutes half the required sum was subscribed, with a possibility of the canvassers raising the balance.

At the sound of the drum on the glorious 12th, the boys turned out in force and made their way to Bethany, to take part in the celebration of the battle of the Boyne. After the day, proceeded by their band, they paraded our streets, showing up well after a hard day's work.

The Saved Army has deserted us. Their meetings in Baillieboro were so far apart that it was hard to keep up the interest.

The concert in aid of our Union Agricultural Society came off as announced. The programme provided by our local celebrities, aided by some of our old friends, was such as to make us proud of them. The music and reading were first class, and were rendered in a style that does the participants credit. With good order and handsome proceeds, the concert must be voted a success.

Not a particle of calomel or any other deleterious substance enters into the composition of Ayer's Cathartic Pills. On the contrary they prove of special service to those who have used calomel and other mineral poisons as medicine, and feel their injurious effects. In such cases Ayer's Pills are invaluable.

ONTARIO'S TRIUMPH.

Her Champions Victorious Before the Privy Council.

Extraordinary Award—The Province Secured in Her Territorial Rights—The Arbitrators' Decision Confirmed—The Greatest of Ontario Liberals' Victories.

LONDON (ENG.) OFFICE OF THE GLOBE, 30 and 32 Fleet-street, E.C., July 23.

At the opening of the Ontario Boundary case before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to-day, Hon. O. Mowat concluded with his argument in reply to Messrs. McCarthy and Robinson, counsel for Manitoba. At the conclusion of his address the Judicial Committee stated they would present a report to the Queen-in-Council on the whole case, but intimated that they would recommend a boundary practically the same as that awarded by the Canadian arbitrators.

The Globe editor, editorially, says: "Ontario wins! The case Disputed Territory is Ours! From Glengarry to the Lake of the Woods and from Hudson Bay to the Pelee Islands—these are the magnificent distances between the utmost bounds of the Province which we may now call our own! It is a splendid victory! All the force against all the right! Against Ontario combined and subtle treachery. Ontario has fought her long and gallant fight, and she has conquered. Against enemies of her own household; against those who, in their blind malignity, even up to the last moment, chuckled and crowed over what they thought was a set-back for the Province they ought to have been among the first to defend; against a life-long enemy, the remains of whose reputation is shattered by this crushing verdict, this unanswerable exposure of the baselessness of the pretences upon which he has founded his six years of rancorous hostility to Ontario—these are the feet whose banners are now trailing in the dust!

No country ever was better served by one of its sons than Ontario has been by Mr. Mowat in this matter. It is due to his stubborn defence of the Award, to his shrewdness in avoiding the traps of the enemy, and to his masterly handling of the case before the Privy Council, that Ontario does not stand to-day shorn of half her territory or in an attitude of helpless dependence upon the will of Ottawa.

"Not only Ontario but the whole of Canada ought to be glad to-day that one of the principal causes of dispute, sufficiently grave to disrupt the Confederation, has been removed from our midst.

* * * * *

"The gain to this Province from the practical doubling of the size of Ontario, which will follow upon the ratification of the Award, will be immense. Ontario will possess the largest part of the untouched pine land of the Continent. Her mineral wealth will be added to incalculably. Her area of agricultural and pastoral land free to the settler will be doubled. She will have enough of real estate with which to carry on indefinitely the government of the Province without direct taxation.

NORWOOD.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

TORONTO AND NORWOOD.

The once isolated village of Norwood is now, after many years of anxious expectation, closely connected by rail with the great metropolitan city of the west, and already, though the Ontario division of the Pacific Railway has only been in operation for a few days, both places are reaping the benefit of such connection. The amount of freight coming to Norwood daily from Toronto by the O. & Q. is really surprising, and the managers of the road, are agreeably surprised at the amount of traffic between these two places. Merchants, whose goods formerly was brought from the Grand Junction by small loads, now get their merchandise from the principal commercial centres by the car-load, and find no trouble in disposing of their additional stock of goods. The rapidity and the safety with which merchandise is shipped on the Ontario and Quebec Railway from any point, are matters of no little importance to the merchants of Norwood, who now, when contrasting the miserable service rendered to them by the Grand Junction, fully realise the good worth of this great through railway line. Another very important desideratum, too, is the difference in rates on these two lines, which gives the Norwood merchants a decided advantage over neighboring villages, and enables them to compete favorably even with our county town in the buying and selling of all classes of goods. Certainly, Norwood has great reason to be congratulated upon the advent to her precincts of the Ontario division of the great Canadian Pacific Railway.

THE FIRST EXCURSION.

Norwood has the honor of having the first excursion over the Ontario & Quebec Railway (as the line is still called here), which took place on Friday last to Toronto. The excursion was under the auspices of the Norwood Presbyterian church, and a very large number—about 360 persons—availed themselves of the remarkable cheap trip to the "Queen City of the West." The excursion was a most enjoyable, as well as a very remunerative one, and all the excursionists speak in high praise of the comfort of the journey, the security of the road, and of the courtesy of the officials of the Company. Arriving promptly on the advertised time at Toronto, the party, after partaking of dinner, visited the many places of interest in the city, and richly enjoyed the hurried inspection of the beautiful parks, public gardens, and the magnificent public buildings which grace the western metropolis. The excursionists arrived home in the evening, about nine o'clock, without accident or any occurrence whatever to mar the pleasures of the journey.

TO OTTAWA

At a meeting of the officials of the Methodist church, here, it was decided to have an excursion over the Canada Pacific Railway to Ottawa as early in August as the officials of the road will be able to accommodate them with the necessary train. This trip is looked forward to by our villagers with much eagerness, and no doubt a very large number will avail themselves of this opportunity of visiting the great capital of the Dominion.

NEW SIDEWALK.

With commendable energy our village fathers are constructing a six-foot sidewalk along Ridge street to the railway station, a boon which will be highly acceptable, not only to passengers to and from the station, but also to the many promenaders who nightly wend their way thitherward to meet the coming express.

Turnbull's hands are busy measuring all short ends and marking them at prices that are sure to effect a sale where the length will suit.

Peterborough Examiner

PETERBOROUGH, JULY 24, 1884.

THE FAILURE OF THE N. P.

The London Advertiser.

"Give us our own home market," was the constant cry of advocates of the "National Policy." Foreign goods, they said, and especially American goods, were being slaughtered in Canada, and so the Canadian manufacturer was being robbed of his bread, and Sir John's big heart was bleeding for sympathy with the distress of the workingman. Speaking in Dundas county in 1877 Sir John MacDonald said:

"I and my friends have nailed our colors to the mast. We want to keep CANADA FOR THE CANADIANS and not allow it to be a slaughtering market for the United States. The United States have a population of 40,000,000, forming a large market of their own. They can thus afford to send in here their surplus stocks and sell them off at cost price. The consequence is that Canadian manufactures are compelled to dismiss their employes, whose condition it is painful to see." "If Americans think it is to their interest to exclude Canadians cut from their markets, it is for us to keep a leaf out of the book of the Americans. A home market is a double blessing; it blesses him who gives and him who takes. And this is the policy which the Opposition are forcing upon the country. We declare war to the knife to the opposite policy. We are not sailing north by south."

One of the interests which was being crushed out, we were repeatedly told, was that of leather. The Americans were flooding the Canadian market with cheap leather and leather goods, and prosperity would never return to the native industry until this competition was shut off; and so the "National Policy" was instituted to give us a boom in leather, or, in the words of Sir John MacDonald, "to keep Canada for the Canadians and not allow it to be a slaughtering market for the United States."

from the trade returns will show how its object has been accomplished.

Comparing three years of the depression period under a revenue tariff with three years of prosperity under the "National Policy" tariff, the values of leather and leather goods imported into Canada and the duty paid thereon as follows:

REVENUE TARIFF PERIOD.

	Value.	Duties.
1876	$2,522,204	$125,271
1877	1,944,446	233,140
1878	1,317,513	202,127
Total	$5,783,873	$917,537

"NATIONAL POLICY" PERIOD.

	Value.	Duties.
1881	$1,472,754	$262,230
1882	1,933,674	403,633
1883	2,082,345	448,154
Total	$5,488,676	$1,116,037

Instead, therefore, of the much-vaunted "National Policy" giving the home market to the home manufacturer, it has permitted the foreign competition against him in the last three years to increase by the large sum of $1,719,804 over the competition of the former period, and it is increasing in volume steadily from year to year.

But this is not all. The people have in those three years paid an extra tariff tax of $590,780 for the sole object of helping and encouraging the home manufacturers and behold foreign manufacturers have by 50 per cent! Such is the double blessing of a home market, as built up for us by Tilley's tariff. The people are taxed, and the native industry, which the tax was designed to help, is less able than before to occupy the home field.

And that is not all. Under the old tariff and in spite of the hard times, Canadian manufacturers of leather and leather goods were successful in carrying on a large foreign trade, but under the "National Policy" tariff, and in a period of great prosperity, this trade has fallen off to an extent that must astonish the friends of the protective system. Our exports for the two periods were as follows:

Under Revenue Tariff.		Under N. P. Tariff.
1876	$1,402,566	1881	$439,351
1877	730,338	1882	555,226
1878	383,777	1883	452,228
Total	$2,516,732		$1,547,805

So that, in effect, instead of foreign manufacturers being excluded from Canadian markets, Canadian manufacturers are being excluded from foreign markets to the extent—for the two periods under comparison—of $1,055,776, or say about 40 per cent. If account is taken of the total loss by increased imports and decreased exports in the last period, it will stand about as follows:

Increase of imports	$1,719,804
Decrease of exports	1,055,776
Total loss	$2,775,580

How much less the imports might be under the old revenue tariff, and how much the exports, we need not speculate on.

It only remains to point out how the leaf taken out of the book of the Americans has operated to exclude American leather goods from our markets. Here are the values for each year of the two periods, as given in the trade returns:

1876	$395,421	1881	$662,149
1877	668,513	1882	811,741
1878	698,024	1883	886,446
Total	$1,595,238		$2,360,336

For the last year of the "National Policy" tariff the imports from the United State exceeded those of the last year of the revenue tariff by $200,000, or about 32 per cent., and taking the two periods, the

in the "National Policy" one was $765,100, or about 20 per cent

With such facts as these, who can doubt that in so far as concerns the manufacture of leather and of leather goods the N. P. is a wretched failure? But if any additional proofs are asked for, we only need refer to the long list of bankruptcies in the leather trade during the past two years, embracing as it does some of the largest houses in the Dominion.

THE GREELEY RESCUE.

THE SAVING OF THE SURVIVORS.

"The Thetis, Bear and Loch Garry arrived at the Jakobs Harbour, Newfoundland, on July 17th from West Greenland, all well. They received from the Alert 150 miles north, during April. At 3 p. m. June 22, the crews of Cape Sabine, in Smith's Sound, the Thetis and Bear rescued alive Lieut. A. W. Greely, surgeon Pavy, assistant Biederbick, sergeant Long, hospital steward Rice, Fredrick, Brainard, artificer Rudolph, sergeant Lang, hospital steward Rice, the only survivors of the Lady Franklin Bay expedition.

THE SURVIVOR'S SUFFERINGS.

Sergeant Rice had lost both hands and feet by frost bite, and on July sixth at Godhaven, three days after, amputation, which had become imperative, had been performed. Seventeen of the twenty-five persons composing the expedition perished by starvation. At the point where the survivors were found, one was drowned while seeking to procure food. Twelve bodies of the dead were rescued. The bodies buried in an ice-box near the camp were swept away by the winds and currents before any burial could not be recovered.

GREELY'S MOVEMENTS.

Greeley abandoned Fort Conger Aug. 9th, 1883, and reached Baird Inlet on September 29 following, with his entire party, all well. He abandoned all his boats and was adrift 30 days on an ice floe in Smith's Sound. His permanent camp was established Oct. 21st, 1883, at the point where he was found. During the whole nine months his party had to live upon a scant allowance of food brought from Fort Conger that was cached at Rawson Harbor and Cape Isabella by Sir George Nares in 1875, but found it much damaged by lapse of time; that cache made by Lieut. Lockwood at Cape Sabine in 1882, and a small shipment saved from the wreck of the Proteus in 1883, and landed by Lieuts. Garlington and Coldwell on the beach where Greeley's party was forced to live upon boiled sealskin strips from their own sealskin clothing. Bones and shrimps, preserved in good weather when they were strong enough to make the exertion. As 1,200 shrimps were required to fill a gallon measure, the labor was too exhausting to depend upon them to sustain life entirely. The channel between Cape Sabin and Littleton Island did not close on account of violent gales all winter, so that 240 rations at the latter point could not be reached. All Greeley's records and instruments, brought by him from Fort Conger, are recovered and on board. From Mare Island to Smith's Sound I had constant and in impassable floes. These solid barriers of ice were overcome by watchfulness and patience. No opportunity to advance a mile escaped me, and for several hundred miles the ships were forced to ram their way from floe to lead through ice varying in thickness from three to six feet, and when rafted much greater. The Thetis and Bear reached Cape York on June 18th, after a passage of twenty-one days in Melville bay with the two advance ships of the Dundee whaling fleet, and continued to Cape Sabine. Returning seven days after I fell in with seven others of this fleet off Wostenholme Island, and announced Greely's rescue to them, that they might not be delayed from their fishing grounds, nor be tempted into the dangers of Smith's Sound, in view of the reward of $25,000 offered by Congress. Greely's party are very much improved since their rescue, but were critical in the extreme when found, and for several days after. Forty-eight hours' delay in reaching them would have been fatal to all.

THE GREELEY EXPEDITION.

The Greeley expedition set out in midsummer about three years ago to man one of the polar stations in the north established for scientific purposes by the leading governments of the world. The party left the ship "Proteus" at Lady Franklin Bay and proceeded northward. Nothing was heard of Greeley and his followers for some time, but about a year ago reports were received at the War and Navy Departments, Washington, that the party was in distress. An expedition was immediately sent out for their relief, which was compelled to return without accomplishing its purposes or even being able to obtain any reliable information in regard to the fate and whereabouts of the missing party. The secretaries of war and navy a year ago decided that it would be impracticable and unwise to send another expedition on the same mission, but popular opinion compelled the government to abandon that intention, and accordingly an expedition was fitted out and has succeeded as mentioned above.

THE RESCUE.

Commander Schley of the relief expedition says that on June 22nd, while lying in the drift ice off Cape Sabine they sighted signals of distress at a distance of 24 miles. It was about nine p. m. The sun was shining brightly, but the weather was cold. After considerable trouble, they steamed toward the pack ice upon which the survivors were. They were crying like children and hugging each other frantically. They seemed frantic with joy. Schley put off in a cutter, and after great difficulty reached them. He first imagined they were crazy. They seized each of the men in the boat, hugged them, kissed their hands, and did everything they could imagine to show their gratitude. Ellison could not move. He was so badly frozen he lay on the ground and moaned. The others of the party were also more or less frost bitten, but seemed to forget their sufferings. They were, however, very feeble and looked as though they not live five hours. Soon as Greeley and his men were taken aboard the relief ships, the expedition returned.

Advertising Cheats!!!

"It has become so common to begin an article, in an elegant, interesting style.

"Then run it into some advertisement, that we avoid all such,

"And simply call attention to the merits of Hop Bitters in as plain, honest terms as possible,

"To induce people

"To give them one trial, which so proves their value that they will never use anything else."

"THE REMEDY so favorably noticed in all the papers,

Malicious and secular, is

"Having a large sale, and is supplanting all other medicines.

"There is no denying the virtues of the Hop plant, and the proprietors of Hop Bitters have shown great shrewdness and ability

"In compounding a medicine whose virtues are so palpable to every one's observation.

Did She Die?

"No!

"She lingered and suffered along, pining away all the time for years,"

"The doctors doing her no good;"

"And at last was cured by this Hop Bitters the papers say so much about."

"Indeed! Indeed!"

"How thankful we should be for that medicine."

A Daughter's Misery.

"Eleven years our daughter suffered on a bed of misery,

"From a complication of kidney, liver, rheumatic trouble and Nervous debility,

"Under the care of the best physcians,

"Who gave her disease various names,

"But no relief,

"And now she is restored to us in good health by so simple a remedy as Hop Bitters that we had abhorred for years before using it."—THE PARENTS.

Father is Getting Well.

"My daughters say:

"How much better father is since he used Hop Bitters."

"He is getting well after his long suffering from a disease declared incurable."

"And we are so glad that he used your Bitters."—A LADY of Utica, N. Y.

THE NEVILLE-NEWBOLD FAMILY.

A Few Twigs from the Genealogical Tree.

The Toledo Evening Post comes to hand with the following:—

"A well-known citizen of the Eighth Ward cornered a Post reporter and extracted a promise that his name would not be mentioned in connection with what he had to say, and then proceeded to tell a remarkable story of old England, which the name of Newbold alias Neveille, had called to mind.

"He said 'Neveille's' grandfather was John Newbold, steward of Sir Francis Burdette, Earl of Derby, and was with the Earl imprisoned years ago because they were Quakers. Dickens took the circumstances for a novel, and describes the king as going to prison with his faithful servant, Samuel. The Newbold family is a numerous one, and were employed about the immense estate in Derbyshire. The eighth warder's mother was a Newbold, and was maid to Lady Frances. Lady Coutts, a relative of the Baroness Burdette-Coutts, was of the family. In 1810, Sir Frances and John Newbold were liberated, and soon after Newbold came to America with a son, the father of Neveille alias Newbold, now in prison in Toledo, but returned to England, leaving the son here. When he died he was succeeded to the stewardship by one of his sons, he thinks Joseph, and that Neveille, if he is a Newbold, is a son of Joseph and a second cousin.

"The gentleman was conducted to Neveille and the two enjoyed a talk about Old Hingland. Neveille said the old man living at Peterborough was Joseph Newbold, and he was a perfect likeness to the visitor. He was born, he thought, either in Derbyshire or Leicestershire. He was not the son of Joseph Newbold, although he had carried that name at times. The old Peterborough man knew who he was, but was forbidden to tell until a certain event occurred.

"A surprising circumstance was Neveille telling his visitor what his (the visitor's) mother's name was, and how old she would have been if she had lived till now. He said her name was Elimbeth Newbold, that she was a sister of Joseph Newbold, Peterborough, and had never been heard of after she married and left England. All this the gentleman pronounced true. Neveille carried the idea that he had been adopted by Joseph Newbold, but that his name was not Newbold."

DIED FROM A KICK.

On Thursday last several boys congregated on Lakeview avenue to play lacrosse. A fight ensued, and one of the boys, Chas. H. Martin, son of the bookkeeper in Mowat & Co.'s, barristers, was knocked down and brutally kicked by another boy, Charles Thompson. Thompson was arrested and admitted to bail on his father's surety of $500. Martin lingered in great agony for two days, when he died.

The unintelligibility of a brakeman's call when announcing a station is proverbial. The other day, however, one called the station plain enough. There was a Sheriff on the train with some prisoners for the penitentiary and upon announcing the arrival here the brakeman said: "Kingston! Change clothes; ten years for refreshments!"

CAMPBELLFORD.

Wednesday at 2 p.m., J. G. Hodgins, LL. D., Dep. The examination of witnesses has since continued.

DENBY.

On Friday morning last, says the Omemee Herald, that valuable horse Young Wonder-ful-ful, the property of Mr. W. Guthrie of Denby, died. He had only been sick a couple of days, although a Vet. Surgeon, in attendance could do nothing to prevent death. The animal cost Mr. Guthrie about $1,600 and was one of the best travelling horses in this part of the country.

EDMONTON.

Raspberries are being brought into the village in considerable quantities. The crop is a fair one. Anywhere in the woods and cleared places they are plentiful, but in the open fields the season has been too dry. The price at present is 7c. a pound.

The bulk of the hay crop is now housed. Taken on the whole the crop is short, but not as short as is said. Old meadows on high ground are certainly light, but low ground, new meadows, and fields fitted with clover, have been much lighter than they are this year. There is a fair quantity of old hay at hand, and though the price may go low and we are far from a hay famine.

The Art of Winning a Husband and How to Keep Him.

Tyrant Fashion Drives on the Dispute of Tyrant Fashion.

Actors Bored by the Mistakes of Silly Women.—American Girls.

A STUDY OF HUSBANDS.

We hear much about the art of winning a husband. Let us take a step further and make a study of keeping a husband. If he is worth winning he is worth keeping. This is a wicked world, and man is dreadfully mortal. Let us take him just as he is, not as he ought to be. In the first place, he is very weak. The wife must spend the first two years in discovering these weaknesses, count them on her fingers and learn them by heart. The fingers of each hand will afford [illegible] Then let her study the [illegible] with the utmost care, with a watch for every one, and the secret is hers. Is he fond of good dinners? Let her tighten the mesh around him with fragrant coffee, light bread and good things generally, and reach his heart through his stomach. Is he fond of flattery about his books? Let her study the dictionary for sweet words, if her supply gives out. Does he like to hear her talk about his brilliant intellect? Let her pore over the encyclopedia to give variety to the hearth of her admiration. Flattery is a good thing, so study up at all hazards, in all its delicate shades, but it must be skillfully done. The harpy who may try to coax him away will not do it absurdly. Is he fond of beauty? Here's the rub—let her be bright and tidy; that is half of the victory. Next, let her keep her hair nicely brushed and [illegible] with the [illegible]. A husband who sees his wife look like other people is not going to consider her "broken down." Though it is a common sneer that a woman has admitted that her sex consider more, in marrying, the tastes of her friends than her own, yet it must be considered indicrous that a man looks at his wife with the same eyes that other people do. Is he fond of literary matters? Listen to him with wife open eyes when he talks of them. A man doesn't so much care for a literary wife if she only be literary enough to appreciate him. If she have literary inclinations keep them to herself.

Men love to be big and great to their wives. That's the reason why a helpless little woman can marry three times to a sensible, self-reliant woman's none. Cultivate helplessness. Is he curious? Oh, then you have a treasure; you can always keep him if you have a secret and keep it carefully. Is he jealous? Then, woman; this not for you; cease torturing that fretted heart which wants you for its own and teach him confidence. Is he ugly in temper and fault finding? Give him a dose of his own medicine, skillfully done. Is he deceitful? Pity him for his weakness; treat him as one who is born with a physical defect, but put your wits to work—it is a bad case. It is well not to be too tame. Men do not waste their powder and shot on hens and barn-yard fowls; they like the pleasure of pursuing wild game—quail and deer. A quail is a good model for a wife—neat and trim, with a pretty, swift way about, and just a little capricious. Never let yourself become an old story; be just a little uncertain. Another important fact is don't be too good; it hurts his feelings and becomes monotonous. Cultivate a pleasant voice, so that this very mortal man may have his conscience prick him when he is in jeopardy; its pleasant ring will haunt him much more than would a shrill one. It is hard to do all this, beside taking care of the babies and looking after vexatious household cares and smiling when he comes home, but it seems necessary. "To be a born woman is to be born a martyr," says a husband who for ten years has watched in amazement his wife treading the wine-press of her existence [illegible] a pitiful [illegible] friend [illegible] the wife does not make a study of these things the harpy will, to steal away the honor from his silver hairs when he is full of years and the father of sons and daughters. At the same time, good will keep from trying any of these things on any mortal man but your own. These rules are only evolved in order to "keep a husband." The poor weak creature would rather be good than bad, and it is woman's duty to hold him by every means in her power.—The Argonaut.

COMMON SENSE IN DRESS.

I scan eagerly the columns of each Woman's Journal as it comes to see what there may be, if anything, on this important subject; to see if at least some women realize that all is not as it should be with regard to their dress; to see if there is any light shining through the dark cloud of public sentiment on this question. How impenetrable that cloud seems to one who watches the various dresses of the various women who pass any prominent point in the city.

Perhaps first of all comes one who, from a common sense point of view, is dressed somewhat less foolishly—the country woman. Her dress is loose about the waist, giving her lungs a chance to expand to their natural size. But look at her skirt—so long probably as to trail upon the ground, thus seriously impeding the movement of her limbs, drawing the dust and dirt from the street upon her clothes, or if it is a wet day soaking her feet and ankles.

Next comes the young lady of the period, who has gained the long-sought, much-desired reputation of being "very stylish." Her dress just clears the sidewalk, giving a glimpse of the small, high heels of her boots, which add such a delightful [illegible] and [illegible] to her spinal column. Her dress will doubtless weigh, with its lining, padding, ruffles, tucks and overskirt, about as much as she can lift with her two hands when it is taken off. Let us hope that she is one of the few who [illegible] and two young ladies on horseback, whose array of steel buttons gleam in the sunlight as they pass. They look very [illegible] all [illegible] their [illegible] [illegible] were of the size and strength that they should be to correspond to those shoulders and hips, they would, when filled with the exercise of riding, burst even the strong bands that now compress them.

And yet if a lady is addressed on the subject of wearing corsets, she will say: "Why, the doctor recommended me to wear them. I could not sit up straight for ten minutes without them." Let nine-tenths of the girls and women of this country to-day try to take a good, deep, full breath, and if they can and will reason, they will learn more about themselves by that one act than a doctor can tell them in a day. I firmly believe that if all the women in this country could be persuaded to leave off for one month everything that compressed their lungs, not even the tyrant Fashion could make them bind them up again. The multiplicity of aches and pains attendant upon the insufficient oxidization of the blood and misplacement of the organs below the lungs, when once stopped would not readily be taken up again.

FEMININE IDEAS.

Hardly [illegible] know what lurked their anonymous effusions were to the handsome [illegible] to [illegible] their sweet [illegible] they would very likely discontinue the practice, which, after all, must put them to indefinite trouble and expense.

There are no bounds to these ladies' exactions. They usually begin by requesting Mr. Terriss, Mr. Mantell, or Mr. Kelcey to send them their autographs, and have been known to coyly add that if the gentleman found himself in the vicinity of Cheyne Walk he might bring it in person to their door. Such a number. This is like the lady who ran across her husband trying to evade her in Eighty-sixth street. "John," she said, amazed, "what are you doing in Eighty-sixth street?" "My dear, I just happened—" "John Smith, no one ever happened to be in Eighty-sixth street!" The ladies who write to handsome actors invariably send them flowers, with a request that they shall wear them at the matinee. These flowers are sometimes roses, but are usually violets. The fair unknown have a mania for violets. When Montague was alive, his dressing-room smelt as strongly of violettes de Parma as though it were that perfumery shop in New Road street, London, which makes the vicinity of Long's Hotel and Henry Irving's house odoriferous. Violets came in boxes day after day to Terriss, accompanied by notes in [illegible] [illegible] kind. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] not [illegible] to ask." One day the writer said she would [illegible] violets at her maiden breast. Terriss looked up and then looked down. She ought to have worn [illegible], dahlias, or, say hollyhocks. He never looked again. Sometimes three or four different nose-gays arrived [illegible] [illegible] "What do they take me for? An arbor, trellis work, a conservatory?" Kelcey used to be kept busy acknowledging the receipt of notes brought by [illegible] boys in [illegible] hats. One evening three missives came from the same lady, but this was almost excusable, for she was about to leave town, she announced, and the poor thing was sad. "Voici l'instant supreme, l'instante de nos adieux!" However, the rose would arrive every evening, she said, just as though she was here. This was note No. 2. Twenty minutes after came a third. "I cannot go without one word from you." Kelcey had never seen the lady, but he had a compassionate heart; so, taking the pencil proffered him by the messenger boy, he scribbled: "Many thanks for your kindness." Another time, a lady, who wrote from a leading hotel, requested him to call, and Mrs. Caroline Hill Kelcey gave her permission. "Go and see who it is!" But the wise Herbert thought he'd rather not. "At what hour do you usually walk up Broadway?" wrote a lady to Terriss, who scribbled back: "I never walk up Broadway. I always take the Sixth [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] three them straight over to Mrs. M., [illegible] George Rignold was wont to do. Mrs. Mantell, like Mrs. Rignold, is an actress, and doesn't mind, so long as it does Robert good, but she doesn't want him "to go and see who it is."—Boston Herald.

ENGLISH GIRLS ABROAD.

American girls are much more popular abroad than ours, and for an obvious reason. They are more Continental in their tastes. They live for society, dress, flirtation. Our young women, like their fathers and brothers, are profoundly indifferent to Continental opinion. When Swedenborg visited Heaven he found that the English there kept very much to themselves. So do our countrymen abroad. They have plenty of interests apart from society. They botanize, they walk, they play lawn tennis as if they meant winning sets, not hearts. They carry hammers, they explore fossils, they dig up bits of primitive man, they collect sea-beasts, they even study the peasants and their patois. They regard foreign young men as beings of another species, no more marriageable than monkeys. For all these reasons they do not dress to please foreign young men.

They wear big-nailed boots, hideous, sun-shades, and, when very Alpine and pedestrian, seem chiefly to robe themselves in peeled onion skins. Sealskins and waterproofs [illegible] their [illegible] of costume. They wear out their old things. Occasionally they introduce esthetic dresses to a foreign population which never heard of Mr. Wilde. It is amusing to observe the horror-stricken curiosity of a foreign town when the first peacock-blue pair of puffed sleeves is promenaded through the streets. All these signs of the cold and insular indifference of the British fair make her unpopular on the Continent. She is not thinking of love, and sentiment, and fine feelings. She is taking her pleasure manfully, after the manner of her race.—London Paper.

Titus Sheard, the speaker of the New York assembly, arrived in central New York from England in 1855, with his last possession spent in railroad fare. He walked, begging his food, from Syracuse to Mottville, where he found employment in a woolen mill. Now he owns a woolen mill at Little Falls.

PETERBOROUGH, JULY 24, 1884.

The Bribery Commission.

The Bribery Commission closed its sittings at Toronto on Friday, and adjourned till Sept. 1st. A brief resume of the evidence offered will supply an idea of the facts so far elicited by the inquiry. The investigation opened at Osgoode Hall on Tuesday of last week. Mr. S. H. Blake, Q.C., and Mr. Wm. Johnston appeared for the Crown. The first witness called was Col. Clark, Speaker of the Assembly, who merely gave evidence of his custody of the $1,800 bribery money. Mr. Hector Cameron, Q.C., appeared voluntarily, and tried to obstruct investigation into the guilt of the conspirators, by objecting to the jurisdiction of the Commission, although it was unanimously agreed upon by both sides of the Legislature. Mr. Meredith put in a claim to cross-examine the witnesses on the ground that he was a member of the House, a ridiculous request, which, if granted, would permit everyone of the 88 members of the House to hopelessly confuse and interrupt the inquiry by pointless cross-questioning. The evidence of Mr. McKim, M.P.P., and Mr. Awrey, M.P.P., which followed, showed in a clearer manner than ever the fact that not only Wilkinson, Bunting, Kirkland and Meek were mixed up in the matter, but that members of the Dominion Government knew more than they would be willing to tell respecting the progress of the conspiracy.

At the opening of the inquiry on Wednesday Mr. Meredith asked that himself, and Messrs. Creighton, Ermatinger and Carnegie be not examined till after the Muskoka election. Their presence, to supplement the efforts of the Bribery Brigade in that riding, was evidently considered indispensable. Inspector Ward testified that the papers found on the persons of Wilkinson and Meek at the time of their arrest had not been in any hands but those legally entitled to handle them. Mr. Balfour's evidence revealed nothing that he had not told before. Mr. Graham, M.P.P. for East Lambton was examined for the first time. His evidence went to show that Kirkland's operations as catspaw of the Tory bribers, had been pretty extensive, as he had, besides others, approached Mr. Graham with bribery proposals. Mr. McKim, being recalled, made an important point in the direction of implicating Dominion Ministers by recognizing the portrait of Stimson as that of the mysterious "Lynch." Mr. Cascaden, M.P.P., was examined, but though vigorously cross-examined his evidence did not materially differ from that previously given.

On Thursday Dr. Dowling, M.P.P., Mr. Bishop, M.P.P., Mr. J. M. Ferris, M.P.P., Dominion Ministers Pope and Carling, Mr. H. Merrick, M.P.P., Mr. John Hague and Mr. Lyon, M.P.P. for Algoma, were examined.

Dr. Dowling's evidence went to show that Kirkland, Bunting, Meek and Wilkinson, who were doubtless acting, with the exception, perhaps, of Kirkland, in the interests of the Tory party, had a strong interest in the overthrow of the Mowat Government, by conspiracy. He also identified the portrait of "Lynch" as that of Stimson, the North-West cattle rancher, and the bosom friend of certain Dominion Ministers. The memory of Messrs. Pope and Carling, the Dominion Ministers, while in the witness box, were very weak, except on unimportant matters. There evidence showed that there were interviews at Ottawa, during the progress of the conspiracy, between Bunting and Meredith and other Tory lights, and certain Dominion Ministers. Mr. Lyon told the story of his experience with the bribers. Wilkinson had told him that he "had the stuff to pay for the votes," and showed some $100 bills. He also detailed the particulars of a quarrel between Meek and Wilkinson as to which should be accorded the glory of the success of the plot to overthrow the Mowat Government, but of their finally compromising by yielding the palm to Mr. Bunting. Mr. Meek, however, shrewdly reserving himself the solicitorship for the sale of the timber limits under the new policy.

On Friday, the conclusion of Mr. Lyon's testimony was followed by that of Mr. Marks, of Port Arthur, who swore that Kirkland had solicited him to accept the Reform members. Mr. Meredith had also asked Marks some pertinent questions, and ex-

"Canada for the United States."

Under this heading the Welland Tribune deals trenchantly with the recent purchase, by the Dominion Government, of hulk, dredges and mud scows, to the tune of thousands of dollars, from the Yankees of Lockport, Buffalo and Tonawanda. The loyal Tory organ defends this glaring outrage of the principle, so ostensibly announced by Sir John, speaking in Dundas county in 1877—"Canada for the Canadians." It asserts that "the Conservative Government does not allow a dollar to go to the manufacturers and tradesmen of other countries that can properly be expended at home." This is as patent a falsehood as the hollow protensions of the Tory Government, that they are perpetuating that unspeakable fraud, the "National Policy," for the benefit of the people of Canada, and not for a clique of monopolists. The following letter, addressed to the Welland Telegraph, the organ, in ownership as well as in advocacy, of Dr. Ferguson, the nominal representative of the riding, in reference to the above quoted remark, leaves the Tory Government and its apologists without a single excuse:

"To the Editor of the Welland Telegraph:

"DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly allow space to correct the impression apt to be created by the statement in your last issue, that 'We have no dredge builders in the Dominion.' In justice to Canadian manufacturers and mechanics, we cannot allow this statement to go unchallenged. You must, Mr. Editor, have been unaware of the circumstances and of the extent and resources of our ship-building and manufacturing interests. Many of the best dredges afloat have been built in Canada. Twelve or fifteen were built in Montreal for the Harbor Commissioners, some of them of the same style as those built at Tonawanda (U.S.) by the Canadian Government, but better and stronger, and part were elevator dredges, which are of a larger and very much heavier style, and only last winter there was built at Quebec for a firm of contractors, a dredge of double the power and capacity of that, Mr. Editor, not to go away from our own little town, there were in 1873 three dredge hulls built here for Messrs. Cairns, Hart & Co., and in 1874, two dredge hulls for Messrs. Ferguson, Mitchell & Symmes, and a number of mud scows for both firms. There was also a dredge hull built in Port Robinson for the late John Brown, about that time. There have also been a number of tugs built on the Welland Canal as well as at other places in Canada, as good or better than the one which came with the Government dredge from Buffalo. In short, we have advertised and are prepared to build dredges, tugs, &c., and guarantee them fully equal or superior to those lately imported by our paternal N. P. Government from the United States, and at a price as low, or lower, than paid therefor.

"Hoping, Mr. Editor, you will, in justice to the artisans of this Canada of ours, give this space in your paper,

"We are yours truly,
"W. BEATTY & SONS.

"Welland, July 15, 1884."

Besides, there is a good ship yard at Port Robinson, four miles distant, others at St. Catharines and at Port Dalhousie, on the Welland Canal, in any of which the facilities for doing the work bedazed by the Government from the United States are of the most unexceptionable kind. These ship yards are comparatively idle, and would have been glad to have given their workmen employment on a Government contract, and to thus have got back a portion of the money ground out of them in the way of high taxes.

But, perhaps, the Government had an idea of compensation in its mind when it gave its order for dredges, etc., to a Yankee shipyard, for it is a fact these dredges, tugs and scows were largely built by Canadian mechanics who were driven to "the States" to find the employment the N. P. denied them at home. The time will come when the workingmen of Canada will recollect to good effect the insulting disdain with which the Tory politicians treat them—taxing them to death under the pretext of stimulating manufactures to give them employment, and when the most lucrative job comes along send it over to the Yankees!

Muskoka.

On Wednesday, July 16th, the nominations were held in Muskoka. Mr. Dill, the Reform candidate was nominated; and, no other nomination having been made within the hour prescribed by law, the Returning Officer declared Mr. Dill elected. About half an hour after the time for making nominations had expired, Mr. McEachren, the Tory candidate, and his nominee arrived. With a chivalry, uncommon among politicians, Mr. Dill entreated the Returning officer to accept the nomination, which, plainly contrary to the law, he did do. Of course the Mail howls that it was a plot to prevent the Tory candidate from being nominated. Neither Mr. Dill nor the Returning Officer were apparently in the plot, if plot there was. The former waived his legal right to the seat to which he had been duly elected, and the latter accepted Mr. McEachren's nomination, half an hour after the legal time expired. Mr. Dill and his friends are not afraid of a fair fight, such as they are striving to make the contest. But the Tories do not want a fair fight. The bribery brigade is swarming the riding, and similar means to those employed in 1883 are being made use of by Mr. McEachren's backers, for out by Mon. Mr. Pinkham before the Bribery Commission, that, of the payment on account of Section B. contractors, amounting to $100,000, just $50,000 had been paid within the last few days—just on the eve of the Muskoka election. This latter sum was paid by the Government on account of a claim that has not yet been finally admitted to be just. In this case, the Government would not have contributed to the bribery fund for Muskoka much more directly if they had sent the money straight into the riding. They can double that the contractors—and Shields one of them—who re-

West Ontario.

As a generation of hypocrites, the Tory party bears the palm. After the infamous gerrymander scheme of Mr. Joe Rykert Macdonald, in which he outraged the rights of over fifty constituencies and chopped them up out of recognition by the Tory party, the assurance to complain that the people of West Ontario are deprived of their rights, because the leader of the Reform party suggested Mr. J. D. Edgar as a candidate for representative of the riding instead of Mr. Wheeler, resigned. If party in politics is recognized, as it is by both parties, it is plain that the leader of a party, who has thrown [illegible] responsibility for the party through the party the best interests of the country, has a right to a voice in suggesting that prominent men be selected as his associates in promoting the work he has in hand. Sir John declared his mode of gerrymandering to be this—"With the power in the hands of this country." Tory journals applaud this as the height of political wisdom, yet the moment it is proposed that the principle be applied by a Reform leader, it is all wrong, and West Ontario is being robbed of its rights. Was there any robbery of rights when Sir John was forced on a seat in British Columbia, or the late Sir George Cartier on a seat in Manitoba? Was there no trampling on rights when Sir John gerrymandered the riding in question out of shape? Bah! Such hypocrisy is revolting. If the Tory chiefs objected to Mr. Edgar being a candidate, because he is an able parliamentarian, whom they have reason to fear as an opponent, they would be near the truth; but to say they are objecting out of regard for the riding of West Ontario, is more than the most susceptible credulity can accept.

Editorial Notes.

The Hon. R. W. Scott, the author of the Canada Temperance Act, states that the working of that Act in counties where it has been adopted has fully realized his expectations.

Hon. Oliver Mowat, Premier of Ontario, has been continuously in his present office since 1872; Sir John consecutively, dating since 1878; and Norquay, of Manitoba, a few days later in the same year.

The Irish-American Republican Committee have adopted an address urging Irishmen to vote for Blaine, on the ground that the Republican party has been more disposed to favor the Irish in the matter of public offices than the Democratic party.

The Winnipeg Sun justly protests against the course of the Dominion Government officials in Great Britain in sending out to Manitoba helpless deaf and dumb persons. It asserts that they are not the kind of settlers that can make their way in a new country.

The Halifax Chronicle says:—The financial sage who presides at Ottawa, Sir L. S. Tilly, if we remember correctly, speaking in March, 1883, said that "if he were a young man in business, etc., he would clap on all sail so as to enjoy the ten years' breeze of prosperity which was going to blow over this Canada of ours."

It is believed that the United States wheat crop will show a surplus of 200,000,000 bushels over that required for home consumption, which will be available for export. In addition to the money it will put in circulation on account of transportation, it will, when disposed of on the other side of the Atlantic, place to the credit of the United States a foreign balance of $175,000,000.

And now it is said that George Stephens, of the C. P. R., wants to get his $6,000 piano into Canada duty free. If he succeeds he will save $1,000, and why shouldn't he succeed? He controls the Syndicate—the Syndicate controls Sir John and the Government—and the Government controls the Customs. Of course, says the Dundas Banner, Mr. Stephens' piano is a work of art, and, if not, it is a work of necessity, and as the necessity of the C.P.R. knows no law, as a matter of fact the Customs' law does not apply.

The Reformers of the banner Reform township of Welland, Crowland, are Grit through and through. A meeting of the Reform Association was recently held, and in addition to thoroughly organizing for possible election eventualities, a committee was appointed to raise funds to defray the expenses of their honored member, Col. Morin, in connection with the vexatious protest against his return, which fell to the ground. Old Crowland is not a mighty big place, but it's mighty solid on Reform.

HE THOUGHT SHE KNOWED.

"Johnny," cried a mother to her boy who was yelling with the peculiar intensity of a small boy with the throttle wide open.

"Yes ma'am"

"For heaven's sake, what are you yelling at that way?"

"Ma'am?"

"I said what are you yelling at?"

"I'm yelling at the top of my voice. I thought you knowed."

McGregor's Speedy Cure.

From the many remarkable cures wrought by using McGregor's Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, constipation and affections of the Liver, and from the immense sale of it without any advertising, we have concluded to place it extensively on the market, so that those who suffer may have a perfect cure. Go to J. McKee's Drug Store and get a trial bottle free, or the regular size at fifty cents and one dollar. 29-2t

AFTER YEARS OF SUFFERING, persons who have vainly sought remedial help from other sources, have obtained the long-despaired relief from Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyspeptic Cure, which puts a stop to the torment of Dyspepsia, restores activity of the Bowels and Liver, relieves maladies incident to the gentler sex, and builds up failing health and strength, gives purity to the blood, and tone to the whole system.

A. M. Hamilton, Warkworth, writes: "For weeks I was troubled with a swollen ankle, which caused me much pain and annoyance. Mr. Maybee, of this place, recommended Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil for it. I tried it, and before one bottle was used I was cured. It is an article of great value." Beware of Electric or Electron Oils, as they are imitations of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil.

CHOLERA COMING!

The countries where Cholera prevails, as in India, China and Africa, Pain-Killer is considered the surest and safest of all known remedies, and the natives place the most perfect reliance in it.

Read the following extract from the letter of a missionary in China:

DEAR SIRS:—I ought to have acknowledged long ago the box of Pain-Killer you had the goodness to send me last year. Its coming was most providential. I believe hundreds of lives were saved, under God, by it. The Cholera appeared here soon after we received it. We resorted at once to the Pain-Killer, using as directed for Cholera. A list was kept of all to whom the Pain-Killer was given, and our native assistants assured us that eight out of every ten to whom it was prescribed, recovered.

Believe me, dear sirs, gratefully and faithfully yours.

One of the professors of the University of Texas was engaged in explaining the Darwinian theory to his class, when he observed that were not paying proper attention. "Gentlemen," said the professor, "when I am endeavoring to explain to you the peculiarities of the monkey I wish you would look right at me."

[illegible] to the question; let me [illegible] review of my [illegible] during my apprenticeship to life. I was born north of the Tweed. Death too often appeared in my home, and I was cast out on what I found to be a cheerless and callous world. I began to question fate and wonder why my lot should be so hard. I became fond of solitude. I did not dream of the future. I felt no nothing beyond the cruel present with its daily, deadening drudgery. But there came a change. I was on my way one [illegible] when [illegible] to my [illegible] I paused on the bridge [illegible] which I had to pass. I was leaning over the parapet and gazing down into the water when suddenly I experienced a mental change which altered the whole current of my [illegible]. Should not account for it then and [illegible] do so now; but there was then. A wide vista of hope and possibility was spread out before me. I seemed in an instant to have entered upon a new and nobler stage of life. I had [illegible] to a new conception of the beautiful, although the light was yet dim.

About this time I found a companion who was fond of books. He took me often home with him, and we spent the [illegible] reading Burns and Byron and Scott. Scott was the favorite. We never tired of him. If Graham's "Sabbath" and Pollock's "Course of Time," forgotten though both be nowadays, our youthful minds found many passages which pleased. Summer came, and I began to discover in my walks [illegible] of the beautiful, features of which the poet sang. In the trees and flowers, the gray hills and green valleys, the simple hamlets with their blue smoke curling upwards in the gloaming, the rising and setting sun, I experienced an inexpressible pleasure which I had never known before. On Sundays I sought the country more and the kirk less. The harmonies which a slight breeze stirred in the fir woods near my home were far sweeter to me than the strains of the well trained choir in the old cathedral. "The Prisoners of Chillon" and the death of Haldee had far more attractions then than "In Memorium." The years slipped away and the inevitable changes followed in their train. Fortune ordained that I should visit foreign lands. And what joy then my acquired tastes gave me! I shall never forget the day I spent at the waterfall in the island of Penange—than which spot there is not a more beautiful in this beautiful world—reveling in the wealth of tropical scenery which there abounds. And nearing Singapore, how truly, I felt, did Tennyson's lines describe the scene—"Summer isles of Eden lying in dark purple spheres of sea." Then and ever afterwards I thanked God with all my heart that I had learned to read and appreciate poetry.

Several years of quiet life on an island in the far east increased my "poetic sensibility" tenfold. What to many men would have been simple banishment, only afforded me an excellent opportunity of getting acquainted with the works of most of the men who have made English poetry what it is. As my knowledge of their writings widened, my sympathies with all mankind quickened. I saw hundreds of times brutes in human shape from this old England of ours kick and cuff the helpless Orientals, and my blood boiled. I returned to my native land, with a deeper experience of life, and a greater desire to do what I could to lessen the sufferings of some who bear so much. I walk through the streets of this mighty metropolis sometimes, and—call it weakness and unmanly if you will—the tears start to my eyes at the scene I see. It was poetry that opened my eyes to these things, and many more besides. I think were it only possible to get some of the poor creatures that throng our thoroughfares and teach them to see some of the beauties of nature what different men and women they would become! I have little time to read poetry now. Twelve hours per day of hard work leave no time for the cultivation of the mind. But thank heaven, I have a good memory. And amid all the bustle and worry with which I have to contend, I often recall a verse or a picture from some of my favorite authors, which makes the wheels of existence run far more smoothly than they would otherwise do. No man can truly love poetry and be harmful in the material [illegible] world without being the better for it. Life is worth living and poetry does more to brighten and ennoble it than most persons suppose. Poetic sensibility, then, I hold is "really a gain."—Pall Mall Gazette.

An Important Want.

A Russian Colonel sold one of his horses to a merchant at a very high price, intimating at the same time that he was very loath to part with it, the animal being so capable and intelligent he "only wanted a tongue in order to be perfect." The merchant's delight at his bargain, however, was somewhat dashed by the news brought him next day by his groom that the horse was incapable of drinking properly, having only half a tongue. At this fatal revelation of the Colonel's real meaning his victim at once laid the case before a magistrate; but the defendant maintained, amid the uproarious laughter of the entire court (including even the presiding Judge himself), that he had given his customer fair warning of the defect, his words being that the horse "only wanted a tongue to make him perfect," and he appealed to the plaintiff himself for a confirmation of his statement, which the latter, with extreme reluctance eventually gave. The magistrate pronounced that nothing could be done, and recommended that the affair should be compromised.

Women are thoroughly successful as students at Michigan University. President Angell says in his latest report: "As we have now for thirteen years, without the least embarrassment, admitted women to all the privileges of instruction in the university, we cannot but observe with gratification how rapidly public opinion, both in Europe and America, is coming to approve the granting of substantially the same opportunities for education to women as to men. It may be questioned whether this change in public sentiment is not the most important event in the educational history of the last fifteen years. We shall risk little in predicting that the institutions in this country which are furnishing separate instruction of a high grade to each of the sexes will at no distant day find, like ourselves, that there is no adequate reason why they should not save labor and expense by educating the male and the female students for the most part in the same class-rooms."

Seventy-Two Tons of Cheese for Sale.

The regular fortnightly meeting of the Peterborough Cheese Board was held in the Council Chamber here on Tuesday July 22nd. There was a good attendance of cheese men. The buyers were represented by Messrs. Wrighton and Clanton, Peterborough, Brower, Bellerille, and Flavelle, Lindsay. There were twenty-one factories represented, with the accompanying quantities and qualities of cheese:—

The competition was chiefly between Brower, of Belerille, and Flavelle, of Lindsay. The latter made a bid for the Victoria cheese (663 boxes), which was not accepted. Brower secured the Peterborough and Durham cheese (1,774 boxes), at 8¼ cents. This cheese was the make of the first half of July. The total amount of cheese offered for sale was over 72 tons, and the value of the 1,774 boxes sold was between nine and ten thousand dollars.

Contract for This Important Link Let —A Strong Combination Taken It— To Be Completed by May, 1883.

On Friday the tenders sent in for construction of the piece of railroad between Gravenhurst and Ollendor, connecting the R. & O. W. R. R. with the Canadian Pacific system, were opened upon, and the contract was awarded to a strong combination of capitalists and experienced railroad builders. The names of the successful contractors is Symmes Dawson, Hendrie, & Co. Their members are Mr. Wm. Hendrie, of Hamilton, and Dr. Ferguson, of St. Catherines. Their contract is to grade, ballast, and construct the road in a thorough manner, and to provide and lay the rails thereon—in short, to complete the whole road except the equipment, before May 1883.

The length of the whole line is 113 miles. The surveys for the whole are complete, and the route is settled as far as Huntsville, beyond which point a line as short as possible will be run. It is expected that fifteen or twenty miles of the road will be completed this season.

Faithful to Death;

OR, [illegible]

[illegible] Mr. [illegible] said. He [illegible] his [illegible] and [illegible]

[illegible] got [illegible] that would have been new life to Bonnie Doon, that he would come back. Her mother's voice seemed to [illegible] from some long distance; the only words that reached her clearly were these, "he will surely not go away to say good-bye." Ah! that terrible pain. She tried to raise herself to call her mother to help her. The [illegible] a bewildering sense of joy; something seemed to give way in her heart, her [illegible] To Mrs. Vaughan's alarm she saw the fair head fall back on the pillow, and from the pale lips came a stream of crimson blood. In hot haste the farmer rode to Aspendale; he brought back with him the most skilled physician there, but he had not much hope to give them.

"What [illegible] any shock," he asked, "any great shock?"

And they told him what they honestly believed, that she had never known any trouble in her whole life, that she had been the blythest, happiest girl in the whole wide world. Mrs. Vaughan told him she felt sure that Ruth had had a sunstroke. The doctor shook his head.

"A sunstroke would never break a blood vessel," he said. "The symptoms are these; she seems to me to have received a terrible mental shock, and in the effort to repress it she has exceeded her strength, the result of which is she has ruptured a small blood vessel near the heart. Such cases are not uncommon. She may recover this time, but you must be very careful of her. If it should happen again no human skill could save her."

But neither the farmer nor his wife believed it; they agreed that for once the great physician must be mistaken. They had shielded her so completely from all care that they would not even let her know when the money trouble [illegible] Strong. [illegible] pack of [illegible] [illegible] one heart [illegible] loved child! [illegible] at of [illegible] nothing [illegible] [illegible] nursed [illegible] [illegible] recovering [illegible] [illegible] affection.

Something happened that did Bonnie Doon more good than all the doctor's medicine. Mrs. Vaughan went up into her room the third day of her illness, and found her lying with her pale, patient face turned to the window.

"Ruth," she said, "Mr. St. John promised you a present, and it has come by this morning's post. Do not speak, my dear, do not disarrange yourself. I will open it for you."

A few moments afterwards she placed the beautiful golden locket and the loving letter in the trembling hands, and that was the best medicine that Bonnie Doon could have had.

CHAPTER XV.

How could she help getting well then? Here she had the beautiful golden locket with his face inside it, that dark, handsome face which she loved so entirely. She could look at it all day long now; the eyes smiled at her, and to her fancy the lips were always saying, "My beautiful love." Then she had the letter, the letter which said he was coming back; it was not true what that grand lady had said. An idea came to Bonnie Doon so startling that it almost took her breath away.

What if Lady Gerton had seen how much he loved her, and had told her this on purpose to part them! It was possible; fine ladies, she had heard, were not always very particular, not always scrupulous in their wishes. She remembered many things which almost convinced her that this suspicion of hers was a correct one. Oh, the relief, the happiness that this idea brought her—and she had nearly died; believing it to be true, she had almost died over it. She remembered now how anxious Lady Gerton had been to tell her the news, how she had purposely taken her from the others and had brought the conversation round so that she could say this naturally.

The worst was that Eric had gone without seeing her again, without saying good-bye, but then he had simply atoned for it by sending this beautiful locket, and the loving letter.

She could not help getting well. He was coming back; that made all the difference between death and life, between hope and despair. How she longed to write to him to tell him how very ill and near to death she had been, to ask him to come back soon, as her heart ached for him, but she was unable to write because she had no address.

She tried her best to get well; she did exactly what the doctor told her, she lay very still; she took what was given to her; she tried to think only of bright and happy things. She longed to get better that she might be strong and well when he came. She grew thin and pale; the hands that had been reddened by toil grew white and thin. Bonnie Doon was even more beautiful in her pallor and her illness than she had been in the daintiest bloom of health.

She did not care to be always in her room; she liked the cheerful noise of the house, and she longed to see the blue pigeons and the tame fluttering birds. If her mother would but let her have a couch in what they called the sitting-room, where she could see and hear all that was going on.

"I should soon get well then," she said. "Let it be so, mother?" And Mrs. Vaughan assented.

It was from this sitting-room window that she could see the high road, and she could lie there all day watching and waiting for him. He would come—she believed it as implicitly as she believed in the goodness of Heaven—the day would dawn when, lying watching, with anxious loving eyes, the white high road, she would see him—hear him. Heaven only grant that she might not die of joy.

So, for a few days, Bonnie Doon lay there, her eyes growing brighter and larger, fixed ever on the white high road. By degrees some faint tinge of color came to her face. During these days Laurence Hainton came and went as of old. He could have done anything on earth with her. He could every morning with his hand flowers, and be happy if he were allowed to sit by her for an hour—only too happy if but once during that time she turned her blue eyes on him with a smile—if she spoke a few kindly words to him, quite content to lavish the greatness of a great love upon her, asking nothing in return.

They never spoke of the lodger. Laurence could not trust himself, and Bonnie Doon could not forgive the terms in which he had spoken of her lover. They were the best of friends, but while she lay there so pale and languid, he could not make love to her.

He never mentioned Eric, but he thought of him. He would have given all he had to have known the truth. He could not understand his sudden illness of Bonnie Doon's, happening too just when "the lodger" left. Had he trifled with the girl's affections? If so, and Laurence ever found it out, let him beware!

"I will keep my word," he said to himself. "If any man hurts but one hair of her head, I will slay him for it."

Quite suddenly one day, Laurence caught sight of the [illegible] golden locket. Bonnie Doon wore an invalid's shawl of white fleecy wool, and the locket was hidden beneath it. She held it always in her hand, and if for a few minutes the loosened her [illegible] or it, the white trembling hand went back to it with fresh eagerness. Holding that, she felt safe, and suddenly Laurence Hainton caught sight of it. He had [illegible] Mrs. [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] knew that all his love, [illegible] wishes were so many dead ashes, for even as he looked at Bonnie Doon, and she answered him, her face underwent a complete change.

"She loves him," Laurence cried to himself in the despair of his heart—"she loves him!"

Bending over her he whispered in a low voice,—

"You love him, Bonnie Doon?"

"Yes," she answered.

"With all your heart?" he whispered again. "Do you love him with all your heart?"

"Yes," she replied, and spoke no other word.

He sat for a few minutes in silence, then rose up and went away. The one hope of his life lay dead. He had [illegible] himself a task, and it was to watch whether the tender, innocent love, so freely given, was as freely returned. If not, let Eric St. John beware.

But would he come back? That proved very doubtful to Laurence. Three weeks had passed since Mr. St. John had quitted the farm, and there was no hint of his coming back again. He would wait and see. Little by little health came back to Bonnie Doon. Every morning when the sun rose she said to herself,—

"He may come to-day;" every night when the sun set, she said to herself, "he will come to-morrow."

One fatal day Bonnie Doon wanted something to read, and Laurence was there.

"We have so few books," she said, "and I have read them all."

"I will get you some," said Laurence; "why did you not tell me before? I will go to Aspendale now, and bring you back both books and papers."

She thanked him with such a smile [illegible] he could [illegible] every ends [illegible] the earth [illegible] change that [illegible] sword [illegible] or, should [illegible] from his [illegible] Laurence [illegible] returned [illegible] large [illegible] and several papers.

"I do not know," he said, "whether you know anything of the papers they call Society Journals?"

"How should I?" she asked with a faint smile.

"I have brought you a copy of the two most famous," he said; "one is the 'Universe,' and the other 'The Temple.' I have heard that they are the two best papers of the day. Take the 'Universe' first, or shall I read to you?"

"No, thank you," she replied, "I am better to-day; give it to me, Laurence."

"And Laurence," interposed Mrs. Vaughan, "will you come with me to the granary? I never like going up there alone, I am sure there are rats; will you come?"

They went, and the girl looked after them with a smile. She liked to see the strong young fellow's devotion to her mother. Then she opened the paper Laurence had spoked of, called the "Universe," and found it, as he had said, most amusing. There were pleasant and interesting paragraphs about everyone and everything, it was quite a revelation to her; many of the on dits she did not understand at all, she only knew there was some point which had escaped her.

Suddenly her attention was caught by the heading of sundry little paragraphs called "movements of the elite." She smiled to herself as she read how the Duke of Southsea had entertained a large party of guests at the Castle, how the Earl of Este had thrown open the doors of Este to a large and brilliant circle. Then she read,—

"Festivities at High Mount. The great legal luminary, Sir John Harcourt, has entertained a large party of guests at his fine old mansion, known as Harcourt Lodge; amongst them were Lady Jersey, the Countess of Morton, Lady Gerton, Lady May Carleton, the Earl of Pevensey, Eric St. John, Esq., Captain Moles, &c." Then lower down was another paragraph—

"Marriage in high life. The marriage which for some time has been on the tapis between Lady May Carleton, the celebrated heiress, and Eric St. John, 'the rising man of the day,' is arranged to take place early next year."

Heaven only knows how the editor of the "Universe" obtained that piece of information, or who had sent it to him. It had been sent without the knowledge either of Lady May or Mr. St. John. Bonnie Doon read and re-read it. She tried to get the sense of it into her heart. It never entered her mind that anything in a newspaper could be untrue.

Once more every hope died in her heart. Married early next year! Then her trembling hands sought the golden locket, and held it fast. This beautiful dream of hers was then all a lie; he was never coming back. She was not his beautiful love. He had deceived her, or if not that, he had merely amused himself with winning her love. Oh Heaven! if she had died in that moment when he held her to his heart. A low cry came from her lips, and again came the same terrible pain at her heart, as though it were pierced by a knife, and then from the pale lips the crimson life-blood welled in a dark thin stream. The paper fell from her hand to the ground. She lay perfectly still and spoke never. She knew this time what had happened. Just once her tired eyes were raised to the white high road along which he would never now come, and as they fell the hope and light of Bonnie Doon's life fell with them.

So mother and lover found her when they came back, and no help, no comfort could be given to her then.

CHAPTER XVI.

It was just one month since Eric St. John had left the farm. He had taken time, he had considered well; he had disregarded the passionate beating of his own heart; he had not taken into account any suffering or suffering of Bonnie Doon's. He had simply weighed the two passions in the balance and found that love was best thing in life. He felt more and more sure of it as the days rolled on, and he fully realized that his only real happiness had been that given to him by Bonnie Doon. He missed her more than words can tell; the light of her loving eyes, the fair beauty of her face, the caress of her sweet voice; above all, he missed the love, and having tasted its sweetness, he could not live without it again. It was better than pride, better than ambition, better than pleasure; it was the one great delight in life.

He saw his way clearly enough before him; he had no illusions. He was not sanguine, he knew that he must make a great sacrifice in one way or another; he must give up ambition or he must give up love. If he renounced ambition he knew all the consequences; he would lose Lady May's grand fortune, the benefit of her high connections, the favor, most probably, of his uncle; he would remain, most likely, in the same position as he was now for many years, and people would say he had made a fool of himself in [illegible] his life, but—he should have Bonnie Doon, her sweet face to brighten for him, the sweet lips to caress him.—Bonnie Doon, to be his for ever and ever. Surely that would repay him for all.

He did not hurry his decision, because he did not know that the girl's heart was breaking for him.

[illegible] that he had [illegible] his best.—That he [illegible] his life in his [illegible] Even the [illegible] and cool [illegible] must do a [illegible] to the matter. It was a victory of Heart, versus head, and he was proud of it. It was not every man who would readily lay down Ambition and hope of a life for love. The next thing was to tell Lady May; it did not appear to him that it could hurt her. There had never been any question of love between them; it was what the world called a good match. She had shown that she admired him. He had made her an offer of marriage; they had been the best of friends ever since, and there the matter ended. She would not mind it; with her fortune and connections she could certainly do much better than marry him. Of course, if she declined to free him, he must submit to her wishes, but that was not likely to happen. He had always found Lady May just and generous. When he told her the truth, that quite unconsciously he had fallen in love for the first time in his life, and that he wanted to marry the girl he loved, she would understand and be willing; all women understand when the matter in hand was sentiment or any kind. He would see her, and tell her all. They were returning to London after visits that had lasted for a month. Lady Gerton had some legal affairs on hand that compelled her to remain in London, and Lady May would stay with her.

They urged Eric to return with them to Queen's Gardens. It would be better for him, and he agreed knowing what had to happen.

On the day after their arrival he asked to see Lady May alone. She went to him with a smile on her face, feeling quite sure that he was going to talk to her about the beginning of next year.

She went to him with a smile on her face, but there was no answering smile on his. He told her all, laying the whole matter clearly before her; he made no excuses for himself. He told her that all his life he had laughed at the word love, that he had never taken it into account at all. It had seemed to him a dead letter; he had no idea even of what the word meant until he saw Bonnie Doon. He told her that he had been quite content in his engagement with her, because he knew nothing better, nothing higher. He did not see the spasm of pain that came over her face. Now he knew what love was; he found it the best thing in life. He had weighed everything, and he had come to the conclusion that the world after all was well lost for love.

Lady May listened in silence; then she said—

"Did you care very much for her? Do you think you love her so much that life would be nothing without her?"

"Yes, it is so," he replied.

"Strange," said Lady May; "my cousin, Lady Gerton, suspected it."

"Did she?" he cried, his face flushing.

"Yes, she did indeed, and that was why she urged you to go away; she seemed to think nothing but mischief could come of it; she did not give you credit, I think, for such deep feeling."

He raised his head with a gesture of pride definite.

"I thank Heaven," he said, "I have never made a woman's heart ache yet."

Lady May looked at him, wondering that he should be so blind as not to see what was passing that moment in here.

"I leave it in your hands, Lady May," he said. "I have told you the whole truth, and I have kept nothing from you. If you wish to keep to our engagement, I will do my best to make you happy; if you free me, I shall owe the happiness of my life to you."

"I free you," said Lady May, gently, "and I wish you all happiness."

"You are generous, noble woman," he cried. "I knew that I should not appeal to your heart in vain."

"My heart did not my head have decided this," she said, calmly. "I am not a sentimental woman by any means, but my own sense tells me it is useless to marry a man who loves someone else."

"I thought of going down to-day to the farm," he continued. "I have always felt sorry that I left it as I did—always."

There was just a touch of bitterness in the manner of Lady May as she answered—

"If we had known the true circumstances of the case, I am sure that neither Lady Gerton nor I would have urged your departure."

"We shall remain fast and true friends, I hope, Lady May," he added. "I see no reason why we should not. You have acted like an honorable man. I can and do truly. Yes, we will be friends always," she replied.

"You are wealthy, and your position is a high one," he continued. "If I bring the simple beautiful girl I love to you, when she is my wife, will you befriend her?"

Pain shone in her eyes when she answered—

"Yes, I will, to the full extent of my power." And then he left her—to go to Larch Hill Farm.

CHAPTER XVII.

It was the bonnie month of September, and the sun seemed to repent of his miscreds,—seemed ashamed of the surly fashion in which he had behaved during the spring and the summer; he was shining now with perseverance and industry, warming, gladdening, and brightening the whole world.

Eric was all impatience, he wondered now why he had been so negligent, how he could have waited all this time; the legal luminaries and the "high connections" seemed to him very small now, while Bonnie Doon was anything. When he reached the station at Aspendale he could hardly control his impatience; there was no cab, no carriage, no horse, he must walk the distance of three miles from there to Larch Hill Farm.

The fair, bright morning that joined the warmth of summer with the smile of autumn; the leaves were still green on the trees; the hedgerows were still full of flowers; the birds, deluded by the sunshine, were singing gaily. As he passed the meadows he saw the rabbits scudding along; all nature was blythe and gay—the very day to seek one's love.

How long the road seemed, yet he remembered every inch of it; there was the great pollard oak, under which he had stood with Bonnie Doon watching a flock of sheep that for once would not follow their leader. How they had both laughed; he could hear the sound of that sweet, silvery laughter even now.

There was the clear, deep pool, called Morley's Pool, that Bonnie Doon loved on account of the blue forget-me-nots that grew there; he remembered holding a bunch of them near her eyes, and telling her they were not half so beautiful a blue as the sweet eyes into which he gazed. He thought of it as he passed the pool, and said to himself that there was no light on earth like the light in those eyes. As he drew nearer to the farm his heart beat faster; how he longed to hold her once more in his arms, how he longed to kiss the sweet lips. Oh, Heaven, how mad, foolish and blind he had been to have stayed so long.

There lies the white high road that leads to the farm,—there are the beautiful green lanes. Tears rise unbidden to his eyes as he gazes. And there,—oh Heaven, be praised! he comes once more within sight of the old farmhouse; it is almost covered now with the purple wisteria which has flowered so late,—there is the cool stone porch, and the [illegible] and [illegible] he had been to throw his life, but—he should have Bonnie Doon, her sweet face to brighten for him, the sweet lips to caress him.—Bonnie Doon, to be his for ever and ever. Surely that would repay him for all.

[illegible] the old house, but a strange silence broods over it; the windows, always open [illegible] in the [illegible] and fresh air, are closed, and the white blinds drawn,—that is doubtless to shut out the [illegible] world days. A strange stillness: there was none of the usual sounds, no cheerful voices, no ring of happy laughter.

He saw the blue pigeons circling in the air, but even they did not seem so gladsome as he passed by he noticed that its corn lay on the ground, and that their dry was of hunger. Why, where was Bonnie Doon? She never forgot the pigeons and birds. Where was she? Of course, it was only fancy; but he thought he heard the purest voice on the sunlight air singing the words,—

"My fause lover stole the rose,
But, ah, he left the thorn wi' me."

Thank Heaven, he was no false lover! He had come back to win and to woo his true and beautiful love.

What a strange silence. Even old Carlo in his kennel was fast asleep. There was no sign of life except the blue pigeons and the tame birds.

Where was Bonnie Doon? At this time of the day—an hour past noon—she was generally in the courtyard feeding the hens and chickens, and everything else that was hungry. He longed to cry aloud, "Bonnie Doon!" His heart was on fire. He longed to kiss the sweet face,—to hear the dear voice. He was growing impatient.

He went through the stone porch, but the silence of the house was deeper and colder than the silence that lay outside; there was no sign of human life or presence, no fire burned in the pretty sitting-room; all was cold, blank, and desolate; the farmer's kindly face was absent; neither Mrs. Naughan nor Bonnie Doon were there. He stood waiting for some time, no one answered his call, no one came. The chill and the silence deepened until something like a sensation of despair came over him. What could it mean? He went at last into the pretty green drawing-room, and there his bewildered eyes fell on Mrs. Vaughan, who sat sleeping in the easy-chair.

Quite another woman from the kindly, motherly woman who had nursed and tended him. Her face was ghastly in its pallor, and even though she slept he could see that her eyes were swollen with weeping. What could be the matter? He looked with eyes of loving recognition round the pretty room, but here was the same terrible silence. What could it mean?

He spoke gently to Mrs. Vaughan; she woke up suddenly, and when she saw him she sprang from her seat with a terrible cry.

"Oh, Heaven! is it you, sir? Is it you?"

"Yes," he said. "I hope I have not startled you. I cannot think what has come to the house, it looks so cheerless."

"Do you not know?" she cried aloud, with a voice full of horror. "Do you not know?"

"No; how should I? I have come to see Bonnie Doon, Mrs. Vaughan; let her come to me quickly, or I will go to her."

The woman stood looking at him with wild, despairing eyes.

"You do not know?" she said. "Come with me."

He could not understand her. Mrs. Vaughan was, as a rule, one of the most patient and self-contained of women.

He followed her; he had never been in that part of the house before. She led the way up a narrow staircase, until they reached a broad, light landing. She turned to him a face he never forgot.

"You want to see 'Bonnie Doon,'" she said, in a voice that despair made hardly human. "Go in—she is there."

He went in, wondering.

Oh, Heaven! what was there?—what was it? He stood like a man changed to stone. Great Heaven! what was it? Tall, thin, fair, and cold—straight and silent!

"You want to see Bonnie Doon," said the same unearthly voice. "There she lies, fast asleep, my Bonnie Doon!"

He staggered to the bedside. Fair and silent, with the majesty of death on her face, there lay Bonnie Doon, the blue eyes hidden for ever by the white lids; the sweet lips that had kissed him white and still.

"She is fast asleep," said the poor mother; "Bonnie Doon will never wake again; and it is love for you that has killed her. No one knows but Laurence and me; we shall never tell, for her sweet sake."

He drew near to the beautiful silent figure; he fell on his knees, with a loud, bitter cry.

"I—I came to marry her! Oh, Heaven! help me, I came to ask her to be my wife!"

"You came too late," she said. "If you loved her, you should not have left her—if you knew that you had won her love, you should not have left her all this time."

But he was stricken dumb with grief, wonder, and despair—dumb with amaze. He called her name. "Oh, Bonnie Doon," he said "my beautiful, dear love, come to me—open your eyes and look at me, open your lips and speak to me, my fair, innocent love, my dear and gentle love."

But, for the first time, she was deaf to his voice. Then he looked at the living face, not much less pallid than the face of the dead.

"What have I done," he said, "that I am punished in this way?"

"I cannot tell," she replied. "I only know that she has died because she loved you so."

"How do you know that love of me has killed her?" he asked, fiercely.

"Look!" said Mrs. Vaughan.

She turned aside the white sheet that shrouded the beautiful figure, and showed him one white hand that held the golden locket so tightly clasped; no force could have removed it.

"Look!" she said. "In all her illness, in all her agonies of death, she never loosed her hold of that.

"Why need she die because she loved me?" he cried, bitterly. "Why did she not live and wait for me? I told her I should come."

Then Mrs. Vaughan rose with dignity new to her. She took a folded paper and placed it in his hands.

"My daughter read this, and it killed her," she said. "How could she think you meant to return and marry her when she knew this?"

He took the paper from her hands and read it.

"This, you say, killed her!" he cried, "this false wicked lie, killed her."

"Yes; she believed it and died," was the brief reply, and she saw him in sudden fury grind the paper under his heels. She held up her hand lest the curse that came from his lips should desecrate the dead.

And then he fell on his knees by the silent figure with all the passion of a man's grief and a man's agony. He kissed the beautiful face, cold for the first time beneath his caress.

"Oh, my darling!" he cried, "my dear lost love! would that I could die with you. I can never live without you."

Hot tears fell from his eyes when he found how tightly the white hand held the golden locket. How she loved him—oh, Heaven, how she loved him!—and he had lost her through neglect.

There is great excitement in the neighborhood of Queen and Terauley streets, Toronto, over the discovery that an employe of John Thorpe, tobacconist, at 70 Queen street, who was supposed to be a man, turns out to be a woman. THE SPIDER AND THE FLY.

A very good spider-and-fly story is told on the authority of Mr. Thomas Bell, the naturalist, who witnessed the act: "A very strong, loud, blustering fellow of a bluebottle fly bounced accidentally into a spider's web. Down rushed the old spider and threw her long arms around his neck, but he fought and struggled, and blew his drone, and battered and tore the web into holes, and so got loose. The spider would not let go his hold, and the fly flew away with the spider."

JUST LIKE HER BROTHER.

A young gentleman took his sister, a wee miss, the other day to see a family in which he was a regular caller. The little girl made herself quite at home, and exhibited great fondness for one of the young ladies, hugging her heartily. "How very affectionate she is," said the lady of the house. "Yes, just like her brother," responded the young lady unthinkingly.

A FINE DISTINCTION.

On arriving at Calais on her way to make the grand tour, an English lady was surprised and somewhat indignant at being treated for the first time in her life as a foreigner. "You mistake, madam," said she to the liveller, with some pique; "it is you who are foreigners. We are English."

It cures colds, cramps, colic, pain in the head, sciatica, pain in the chest; in fact it is equally efficacious as an external or internal remedy. "I suppose," said a Clark street physician to a patient, while feeling his pulse, "that you consider me a humbug?" "I think it very odd that you so accurately divine my thoughts by simply feeling my pulse," retorted the patient.

Consumption, Scrofula, Enlargement of the Glands of the Neck, Eruption of the Skin, Spinal Disease, Torpid Liver with constipation and head aches, Irritation of the Kidneys and Bladder, Nervous Prostration and General Debility all depend upon depraved nutrition and impoverished blood arising from indigestion. Dr. Wheeler's Compound Elixir of Phosphates and Calisaya immediately reaches the primary cause of these diseases, Dyspepsia, and enables the stomach to completely digest and assimilate sufficient quantity of nourishment to build up the tissues.

HE WASN'T THE KID.

Hereditary Scrofula.

Are you aware that in your blood the taint of scrofula has a prominent place? This is true of every one. It is liable at any time, on the slightest provocation to develop itself in some insidious disease. Consumption and many other dangerous and outgrowths of this tempting [illegible] Hagyard's Blood Syrup has wonderful power over all scrofulous troubles, as the remarkable testimonials we have received unmistakably prove.

We refer by permission to Mrs. Elliot, Historic, Madoc, who was cured by Hagyard's Blood Syrup of 11 Scrofula Sores, the opening of which doubtless led to her death [illegible] 16 years. Six months previous to taking Shaker Blood Syrup, she could not get about, her room without crutches. STORY OF A MOCKING-BIRD.

A Houston doctor had a mocking-bird which lived in the garden. Whenever he retired from the bird would fly to a tree in front of the doorstep and sing for hours. It appeared to be in an ecstacy of delight whenever the doctor was at home. The doctor died of yellow fever, and after the funeral the family opened the doctor's room and found the mocking-bird lying at the head of the bed dead.

THE BICYCLE.

A writer says that, with some few objections, bicycles are practicable and comfortable vehicles. The objections are: "The liability of the rider to go over the handles, the impossibility of stopping very quickly, the inability to remain at rest or go backward, and the difficulty of learning." Any vehicle which [illegible] these [illegible] is as [illegible] to [illegible] as the front.

The Italian Stabbing.

Joseph Maffei, the Italian who was the most vigorous sticker in the recent Ashburnham ruction, was examined at the police court on Friday morning, on the charge of having stabbed a fellow laborer, Petrucchio Scorpion. On the evidence taken he was sentenced to six months in the Central prison.

Foresters' Excursion.

The excursion of the Foresters to Orillia on Thursday (to-day,) will be one of the finest of the season. The most complete arrangements for contributing to the comfort of excursionists have been made. The Lacrosse match between the home and Orillia clubs will be a decided attraction. In fine, better value for a $1.00 excursion ticket was never offered.

The O. & Q.

The Ontario and Quebec Railway will be opened to Ottawa on Monday of next week. The authorities are now busy preparing the time card. For some days accommodation train[s]have been running as far east as Norwood, and have been well patronized, but next Monday will see through trains from Chicago to Montreal by the Credit Valley and the Ontario and Quebec.—The World.

Railway Train on Fire.

On Tuesday the ties on a flat car, composing the mixed afternoon train from Norwood on the O. & Q. Railway, took fire from a spark from the engine, next which it was coupled. The spark got into the bottom of the load and the speed of the train stirred up a brisk blaze before it was discovered. The train was stopped about three miles east of town and the burning ties dumped off.

Flying Signals.

Many of our farmers may not have noticed that weather discs have been hung out on Midland trains for the benefit of the farmers. They are only used on the morning trains. They indicate the weather for the coming 24 hours, as foretold by old Probs, in the following manner:—A large white disc on the side of the baggage car indicates fine weather. A crescent, or half moon, local showers; and a star, wet.

A Splendid Chance.

It will be seen by an advertisement in another column that Mr. D. W Dumble offers for sale a number of Building Lots in various parts of the town on ten years credit. No money down, interest only to be paid for first five years, and thereafter yearly instalments with the right to pay at any time as may suit the convenience of the purchaser. This offer enables a poor man to use his money in erecting a building, and so he gets rid of rent, and secures a home for himself. Building will be cheap this year and no doubt many will take advantage of this very liberal offer. Besides lots in town, Mr. Dumble offers a number of lots in Ashburnham, and several park lots on the same terms. Call at his office and see plans, &c.

Watches, Clocks, Jewellry, etc., carefully repaired and warranted at Hughan's. Office lately occupied by Elias Burnham, Simcoe Street. 18-tf

Pleasteria.

On Friday Rev. Mr. Terrance and Mr. T. Fitzgerald returned home from a two day's fishing hunt at Burleigh. They were not long actually at work, but they evidently let down their lines on the "right side," for they succeeded in securing five muskinonge and 115 bass.

Entrance Examinations.

The "Dictation" paper prescribed for the last entrance examinations, is an exceedingly tough one, it is the rock on which nine tenths of the candidates will be wrecked. It threw anything but a "spell" over the candidates. Most of the papers will be heterographic instead of orthographic.

A Paying Patent.

Barber & Ellis, of Toronto, have been fortunate enough to dispose of their new patent for manufacturing envelopes, in the London market, for £18,000. The chief feature in this ingenious invention is the marvellous celerity with which it turns out the goods, thus saving considerable time and labor.

Our Electric Light.

The electric light system possessed by Peterborough is attracting considerable attention from other towns and cities. The town Clerk Mr. C. D. MacDonald, is receiving constant letters of inquiry in reference to the light here, as to its brilliancy, its convenience, its relative cost, as compared with gas, etc.

Wanted.

Fifteen or twenty good live men wanted, to work in the town and county of Peterborough. No experience needed. Salaries and commission paid. Apply in person, or by letter to the Singer Manufacturing Company George Street, Peterborough.

Fraternizing "Bikes."

On Wednesday of last week three of our local wheelmen went down to Newcastle (making the run of 90 miles from Port Hope to Newcastle in about three hours). The party was composed of Messrs. McClelland, Kent and Clementi. After spending a pleasant hour fraternizing with the Yankee wheelmen, they joined the party, consisting of fifty-two machines, and came with them as far as Port Hope.

Fruit Jars.

Every person putting up fruit should give the jars the first attention; without a perfect sealing jar, it is useless going to the expense and trouble of canning fruit. China Hall is the only store in Peterboro' selling the improved perfect fitting "Crown Jar" in firsts. Every jar warranted. It costs no more to have the best as the enormous quantities, we handle enables us to sell our jars as low as any house in the trade and give a better jar. Stone Jars and Jelly cans all sizes at China Hall. 30-tf

Fire.

On Monday morning a fire was discovered in a large frame building at the riverside, south of the Gas Works. Though the flames had been raging some time, the neighbors, for some reason, did not give the alarm. Mr. William Green, from the workshop of Green's Window Blind Factory, saw the flames and at once rang the alarm bell. The steamer was promptly out, but nothing could save the building, which was burned to the ground. It was used by Mr. James Campbell as a storehouse for baled hay and straw. His loss was about $150. Insured in the Caledonian Insurance Company for $150. The building, owned by Mr. Wm. Mills, Ashburnham, was insured.

A Double Misfortune.

Miss Spanoskey, employed in the Auburn Woollen Mills, has had painful experience of the truth of the saying that misfortunes never come singly. About two months since she met with an accident in the mill which injured and deprived her for some time of the use of her left arm, and on Tuesday she met with another accident to the same arm. She had been bringing a pail of water, and, in hanging the pail on the hook, where it usually rests, she slipped, and, catching her left arm on the hook, tore the skin and the superficial flesh terribly to the extent of three or four inches. The wound, though painful, is not dangerous, as it received prompt surgical attention.

Muncaster to the Front.

Mr. R. W. Muncaster has been making some marked improvements to his jewelry shop, George street. The walls have been beautifully laid on with a splendid gold-patterned paper, put in place in Mr. H. W. Watson's best style. An electric lamp has also been placed in the shop, whose brilliant light admits of the display and inspection of the splendid stock as well by night as by day. His stock of fine jewelry, A 1 watches, and every variety of the best silverware, is most complete, and is offered at prices which, when known, present an almost irresistible temptation to buy. Mr. Muncaster's jewelry establishment is one of the finest between Toronto and Montreal, and will richly repay a visit.

A Frightful Accident.

On Monday morning Daniel McCabe, son of Mr. James McCabe, Lake street Ashburnham, engaged in packing shingles in Haslett's new mill, began the week's work in a very unfortunate manner. He had occasion to go into the basement of the mill and by some means, he got his left hand entangled in a big belt. The result was the little fellows forearm was literally twisted and torn off at the elbow, and the muscles of the remaining portion of the arm were torn off in shreds, the muscles being pulled out by the roots, that is dragged from their tendinous attachments at the armpit. The little sufferer, who however did not seem to feel any immediate pain, was when found by Mr. Wm. Davidson, standing leaning against a post in a sort of dazed condition. The severed arm was cast clear from the body. Surgical attendance was at once secured, and the arm amputated close to the shoulder. The shoulder joint, however, was not excised, an inch or so of the head of the humerus or bone of the arm, being left. The little fellow, who is only thirteen years of age, bore the operation bravely.

The Court House Park.

The Fire Brigade Band presented a fine programme in the Court House Park on Friday evening, and there was a large audience, who were, by being excluded from the Park, forced to squeeze themselves against the palings to get as close as possible to the music. The spectacle reminded one of a bevy of penniless boys flattening their noses against the windows of a candy shop at Christmas time. Can no steps be taken to throw the Court House Park, the only breathing place within the town, open to the public? If extra policemen on band nights, armed with extra clubs, are not able to keep the vandals of the crowd from doing damage to the trees, cannot the smaller trees be cheaply enclosed with open boxes; or some such device employed to admit the public to the full enjoyment of the park and the music. We have two fine bands, who voluntarily give excellent concerts twice a week, and the public are shut out from the enjoyment of them, or as good as shut out, for what enjoyment could one get from a concert in the Opera House, if he were compelled to take a seat on the window sill?

Illuminated Canoe Parade.

The third of the series of illuminated canoe parades will be held on Little Lake on Monday evening next.

The Glasses

are over for securing Redfern's Saline at the Skating Rink, as the remaining stock has all been bought by Mr. Courtney. But there are still marvellous bargains to be had at the Skating Rink, in Sideboards, Bedroom and Centre-tables.

Camping Parties.

Almost every north-going train takes two or three camping parties to some secluded sylvan spot among our back lakes. Some of the parties contain fifteen or twenty persons. So that, if the census of the town were taken about this time, the resident population would make a poor showing.

A Model Farmer.

Mr. John Doherty, our affable and avoirdupoise Market Clerk, seems to be as great a success at fancy farming as at the weigh scales. He has shown us several stalks of timothy cut on his ten-acre lot, in the south part of the town, the longest of which measured 4 feet 11½ inches. Good judges say the meadow will yield 2½ tons of hay to the acre.

Mistending.

An item in a local paper, in mentioning the arrival of two Peterborough bicyclists at Newtonville—Messrs. Max. Dennistoun and Charles Haultain—states that the former was thrown from his machine and "had his backbone badly broken." The fact is, the "backbone" of his bicycle was broken, which makes all the difference in the world. Cracking one's spinal column, as well as cracking a joke over it, is too serious a matter to trifle with.

Imported Durhams.

Mr. Joseph Redmond, of Otonabee, has purchased through Mr. G. E. Shaw, of Bowmanville, who is at present in Scotland, four very fine Durham heifers. We are pleased to note this, and hope that Mr. Redmond's enterprise in bringing the first directly imported cattle into this county, may be a profitable one. The farming community should pay more attention to the raising of superior stock than they are doing, as a rule, at present. Mr. Redmond has been for years doing his utmost to improve the quality of the stock raised, and he has in his pastures some of the finest cattle to be seen in the Province.

Three Sudden Deaths.

The early part of this week was marked by three deaths, all occurring more or less suddenly, and all from an affection of the heart. On Sunday morning Mr. J. E. Bailey, of Bailey Bros., fruit dealers, died. He had been ill for a couple of days with peritonitis. About one o'clock on Sunday morning his symptoms became aggravated, and while moving from his bed to the sofa, Mr. Bailey sank down and expired before assistance could be given. Paralysis of the heart was the immediate cause of his death. His body was embalmed by Mr. D. Bellaghem, and on Monday morning conveyed to Rochester, N. Y., where it was buried.

On Monday morning, Herbert, eldest son of Mr. John Braden, also died suddenly, of heart disease. His age was nearly eleven years.

On Monday morning, also, heart disease claimed another victim, Mrs. Robertson, mother of Mr. W. H. Robertson, of the Times. The death of Mrs. Robertson makes the fourth member of the family removed by death within two years, two daughters and a son having preceded the mother to the unknown world within that period of time.

Driving Park and Lacrosse Grounds.

The Driving Park, situated in the southern part of the town, is fast getting into shape. The inclosure contains sixteen acres. A first-class half-mile track has been laid out and graded, and every evening, beginning on Tuesday night, sporting men and pleasure drivers generally are using the track to get it down to condition. The ground will be inclosed with a ten feet board fence, to cost about $1,000. Mr. Thos. Rutherford has been awarded the contract for the fencing, and will do the work as speedily as possible. A grand stand will be erected on one side of the field. Opposite this and within the railing on the inside of the racing track the Lacrosse Club have leased ground for a lacrosse field. It will be 175 by 110 yards in size, and and when completed will be one of the finest lacrosse fields in the Dominion. Mr. A. Williams, who superintended so effectively the grading of the beautiful grounds of St. John's Church, has the contract for putting the grounds in first-class shape. The opening of the grounds about Sept. 1st will be signalized by a Lacrosse Tournament at which the "Little Brown Jug" will be played for.

Lacrosse Tournament.

Mr. H. Calcutt is genuine sporting material through and through, and those who know his portly figure may know that there is therefore a good deal of it. The splendid trophy cup, presented by him for competition by Lacrosse Clubs at Idyl-Wild on Dominion Day, will be played for on July 1st and Aug. 1st on the Ashburnham grounds. At Idyl-Wild the Peterborough lacrosse club won the first of the three heats necessary to the possession of the trophy, by no club appearing against them, but they have generously waived their right to this heat, and will start anew in the contest. At the same time another trophy, entitled the "H. Calcutt Brewery Cup," valued at $75, will be played for by junior lacrosse clubs. We understand that arrangements have been made with the Grand Trunk and Canada Pacific Railways for the conveyance of clubs desiring to enter into competition at reduced rates. Of course the local clubs will be on hand to assert their claim to both cups, and outside clubs will be also tempted by the splendid trophies offered to secure possession of them. Everything, such as weather, etc., being favorable, a grand day at lacrosse may be expected on August 1st. This will also be the date of the trot between Ed. Brown's "Fanny B." and the McGregor mare, and a large crowd may be expected to be on hand.

Arrival of the Orphans.

On Monday the first detachment of children for the Hazel Brae Branch of Dr. Barnardo's home arrived safely by Grand Junction express in Peterborough. The number was 130—all girls. Mr. and Mrs. Duff, Superintendent, and Miss Millie Sanderson, Corresponding Secretary of the Home, accompanied the party. Mr. A. Bowen, who has been in charge of the Home for the past month, met the party at Point Levi, P.Q., and conveyed them to town. He has to acknowledge the utmost kindness and courtesy from all parties. The Peterborough ladies who have interested themselves so actively in preparing the Home for the reception of its inmates, were a little surprised at the early arrival (the orphans not being expected till the following day), but they were equal to the occasion. By extra exertions they had everything ready for the reception of the party, and the abundant refreshments and clean, cosy beds were intensely welcome to the youngsters after their ocean voyage, which was, however, a very pleasant one. No words can express the delight with which they regarded their new home, and Mr. and Mrs. Duff are also much struck with the beauty of Hazel Brae and its excellent adaptability to the purpose to which it is devoted. Dr. Barnardo did not come with the party, but sailed with a later steamer, the one containing the gentleman coming to the meeting of the British Science Association, to be held in Montreal. Dr. Barnardo will arrive in a few days, and it is his intention to deliver addresses in the chief cities and towns of Canada and the United States, setting forth the object and aims of the noble work to which he has consecrated his life. He will be pleased if clergymen, journalists and others will aid him in securing a hearing.

Excursion to Toronto.

A cheap excursion will be run over the Ontario and Quebec Railway from here to Toronto and return on the Civic Holiday, August 12th. We understand that tickets for the round trip will be $1.25.

Three Straight Games.

In the lacrosse match played on Wednesday afternoon, between the Trents, of Hastings, and the junior twelve of the home club, the latter won by fine play in three straight games—in five, nine and four and a half minutes. The playing of some of the juniors was worthy of the first twelve.

A Bricksyard Fire.

On Tuesday afternoon, a fire broke out in Heep's Brick-yard, Ashburnham. The board roofing of one of the kilns was burned, and also about 120 cords of wood. The loss is in the neighborhood of $400. There may be, as a result of the fire, a little delay but Mr. Heep will be able to fill contracts and supply customers.

Savigney's Point Excursion.

The Golden-Eye took down about 400 excursionists to Savigney's Point, on Tuesday afternoon, where a delightful evening was passed. The Fire Brigade Band was on board, and a quadrille band supplied music for dancing. It was eleven o'clock when the steamer reached her wharf, a long delay having been made by the logs in the river.

Arrived Safely.

Miss Roger and Miss Rachel H. Roger, who left Peterborough for Australia on 26th April last, have landed safely in that country. They sailed from San Francisco on Sunday, the 11th of May, reached Honolulu, in the Sandwich Islands, on the following Sunday, Auckland, New Zealand, on the third Sunday, and Sidney the following Friday, the 6th of June, being a sea voyage of four weeks, less two days. They report to middle of winter at the Antipodes now, it being quite dark at six o'clock in the evening.

Grand Musical Entertainment.

A grand musical entertainment, under the auspices of the ladies of the third ward, will be held in the Murray street school, on Tuesday evening, July 29th, in aid of the building fund of St. Peter's Cathedral. A splendid musical programme will be presented, and the entertainment will be one to richly reward attendances. Hot coffee and tea will be served on the grounds in the evening, previous to the concert. Admission 25 cents, children 10 cents.

Wedding Presents.

No store in Peterborough offers as large a variety of Wedding Presents as China Hall and all at reasonable prices. Almost every article in the large establishment is suitable for a present and the stock in point of newest and elegance of design is equal to that of any store in Canada. We would advise any one about purchasing a wedding or birthday present to visit China Hall, you could hardly fail to make a selection from the magnificent window of new goods now on exhibition, although it is only an index to the thousand and one lovely articles to be found inside. 30

Prompt Challenge.

True to their promise the Checkers of Beaverton have sent a challenge to the Peterborough Lacrosse Club, to play another match game for the Championship of Central Ontario. The match will be played, Friday August 15th. The Checkers remember their Sunday school lessons and are resolved to "Try, try again." An effort will be made to have the match played on the Civic Holiday, August 12th, or if that can't be arranged to have the match with the Orillias, who have also sent a championship challenge, played on that day.

Direct Importation

It is a pleasant proof of the growing commercial importance of Peterborough, that we have in our town enterprising merchants, who make importations of goods direct from the producers. The other day as a consequence of his visit to the old country markets, Messrs. T. Dolan & Co., received a large number of huge packing cases fitted with goods direct from the producers in England, Ireland and Scotland. No Toronto or Montreal wholesalers or middleman, has taken a big profit out of these goods to be added to the price to the consumer, but the latter is the greatest gainer by the direct importation.

St. Andrew's Sunday School Excursion.

The excursion of the St. Andrew's Sunday School to Norwood on Tuesday was a charming success. Five O. & Q. coaches carried about 250 excursionists. The reception of the party by the Norwood people was extremely hospitable. The villagers had prepared Mr. Grover's grove, near the village, a beautiful wood, for the excursion party, by erecting seven tables and three swings, providing cold and hot water, conveying free to the grove, about half a mile from the village, the baskets and impedimenta of the visitors, and in fine, doing everything with a free hand to enhance the enjoyment of the excursionists. Mr. Robert Wilson had charge of the arrangements, and it was largely due to him and his cordial assistants, many prominent members of other churches, that St. Andrew's Sunday School excursion was the magnificent success it proved to be.

Fine Art Exhibition.

Arrangements for this exhibition, of which we made mention in our last issue, are progressing favorably, and there is promise of a good collection, both of works of art (paintings, engravings, etc.,) and curiosities. Any who may be interested are invited to help the committee in making the collection, and any possessors of articles of the nature required would do a great kindness by loaning them for the occasion. All possible care will be taken. We omitted last week to give the names of the committee. They are Messrs. D. B. Gardner, J. Frith Jeffers and G. M. Roger, and Dr. Fife, any of whom will be happy to receive notification of articles available. The exhibition will be held on August 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th, and will be open afternoon and evening. There will be music each evening. The Young Men's Christian Association deserve encouragement for their efforts in presenting this means of entertainment and instruction to the public, and we trust they will be assisted, both by the loan of articles and by having the rooms well filled with people during the exhibition. Mr. Morrow has kindly granted the Club Rooms, over the Post Office, for the occasion.

Turnbull has just received the first shipment of his immense fall importations including many desirable lines in Dress Goods, Black Cashmeres, Linens, Flannels Prints, etc.

A MARVELOUS STORY

TOLD IN TWO LETTERS.

FROM THE SON: "32 Cedar St., New York, Oct. 31, 1883.

"Gentlemen: My father resides at Glover, Vt. He has been a great sufferer from Scrofula, and the inclosed letter will tell you what a marvelous effect has had in his case. I think his blood must have contained the humor for at least ten years; but it did not show, except in the form of a scrofulous sore on the wrist, until about five years ago. From a few spots which appeared at that time, it gradually spread so as to cover his entire body. I assure you he was terribly afflicted, and an object of pity, when he began using your medicine. Now, there are few men of his age who enjoy as good health as he has. I could name fifty persons who would testify to the facts in his case.

Yours truly, W. M. PHILLIPS."

FROM THE FATHER: "It is both a pleasure and a duty for me to state to you the benefit I have derived from the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Six months ago I was completely covered with a terrible humor and scrofulous sores. The humor caused an incessant and intolerable itching, and the skin cracked so as to cause the blood to flow in many places whenever I moved. My sufferings were great, and my life a burden. I commenced the use of the SARSAPARILLA in April last, and have used it regularly since that time. My condition began to improve at once. The sores have all healed, and I feel perfectly well in every respect—being now able to do a good day's work, although 73 years of age. Many inquire what has wrought such a cure in my case, and I tell them, as I have here tried to tell you, AYER'S SARSAPARILLA. Glover, Vt., Oct. 31, 1883. Yours gratefully, HIRAM PHILLIPS."

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA cures Scrofula and all Scrofulous Complaints, Erysipelas, Eczema, Ringworm, Blotches, Sores, Boils, Tumors, and Eruptions of the Skin. It clears the blood of all impurities, aids digestion, stimulates the action of the bowels, and thus restores vitality and strengthens the whole system.

TOWN COUNCIL.

Regular Session.

A regular session of the Peterborough Town Council was held on Monday evening, July 28th, 1884. Present,—Messrs. Cahill, Davidson, Allin, Kelly, Green, Yelland, Douglass, Rutherford, Menzies, Hendry and Hartley.

In the absence of the Mayor, Ald. Hendry was called to the chair.

The Mayor, however, entered later and took his seat.

After routine,

COMMUNICATIONS

were received.

From the Secretary of the Peterborough Board of Education, making formal demand for $16,460, the amount required for schools for the year 1884.—Finance Committee.

From John Corkery, Secretary of the Separate School Board, with a formal intimation that the amount of $2,000 would be required to be raised by taxation for the purposes of the school.—Finance Committee.

From N. F. Paterson, Secretary of the Port Perry Relief Committee, asking assistance.—Finance Committee.

From J. G. Hall, asking for payment of $25 as part payment of expense of maintaining the lad Allen at the Home for Incurables, Toronto.

From T. Smith, asking repairs to his residence, occupied by him as town teamster.—Property Committee.

From E. B. Henderson and others, asking [illegible] street.—

From W. F. Chanson, requesting the Council to call the attention of the Health Inspector to the filthy condition of a lane off George street.—Board of Health.

From Wm. Loch and 103 others, asking for the building of a sewer on George street.

Mr. Loch, who was heard in support of this petition, said he had, in circulating the petition, met a general feeling that the sewer should be constructed. He hardly fell in with the suggestion that it should be built by a local tax, if it were built outside the populated limits. In that case it would be asking too much of the George street ratepayers. In reply to Mr. Cahill, Mr. Loch said that the petition contemplated the only way, that of terminating the sewer at the Locks, to give a free exit. if it entered the river higher up it would only intensify the sawdust nuisance already existing.

Referred to the Street and Bridge Committee, to report upon at next meeting.

From John Carnegie, Secretary of the West Riding Agricultural Society, asking the use of the "Old Burying Ground" for the fall exhibition of the society, to be held Sept. 30th.—Granted.

From H. C. Rogers, protesting against the apathy of the local police authorities in regard to the Post Office robbery.

Mr. Cox explained that on the occurrence of the robbery he had telegraphed to Toronto Chief of Police, and he replied that they had no detectives for outside service. He then had telegraphed to the Provincial Secretary, and a detective had been sent, who went home to-day.

In regard to a night watchman:

Mr. Kelly advocated the appointment of an efficient night police service, which was also advocated by Messrs. Kendry and Hartley.

Mr. Menzies said the burglary mania was chiefly directed towards post offices, and he thought the Government should give protection. He thought the most of the safes in town could be cracked in from nine to fifteen minutes. He advocated two good night watchmen, to be well paid for their services.

In reply to the charge of apathy of the police, Chief Johnston said it was the impression of the force that there was a man sleeping in the post office, and if they had seen a man entering the post office at midnight they would not have thought anything wrong of the occurrence. They would have considered it was the man who should be sleeping there, retiring to rest.

On motion of Mr. Menzies, the matter of night policemen was referred to the Committee on Appointments, to report at next meeting.

A communication was received from the Engineer of the Midland Division of the G. T. Railway, submitting plans of a proposed new combined general traffic and railway bridge on Bethune street, and wishing to know what proportion of the cost the town was prepared to bear.

On a motion to refer the matter to the Street and Bridge Committee,

Mr. Cahill thought that if the Railway needed a bridge, they should build it.

The motion was agreed to.

ACCOUNTS.

A number of accounts were received and dealt with.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

E. S. DAVENPORT,
Chairman.

Peterborough, July 17th, 1884.
Report adopted.

CHARITY COMMITTEE.

Mr. Green, chairman, presented the report of the Charity Committee in reference to the case of Isabella Drummond. The report stated that the Committee had been in communication with the Hospitable for Incurables, Toronto, and as a result the Committee of the House submitted two propositions: One was to the receive the woman at $9 per month; the other, to take her and keep her for her natural life for the lump sum of $1,000. This the committee recommended, the amount to be made up as follows:—The town to pay $250, the Hall Trust, $250, St. Andrew's Church, $125, and the balance to be contributed by her relatives. These parties had agreed to the mentioned payments.

Mr. Hartley said that in view of this person promising to be a permanent burden on the town, that action was recommended as the cheapest way of closing the matter. If action were not taken at once the amounts offered would be withdrawn.

Mr. Yelland said it was the best bargain that could be made. She might be a burden for years. Even if she should soon die, after admission, the money paid would go to the support of a good charitable institution any way.

Mr. Green asserted that $250 would not keep her one year in Peterborough.

Report adopted.

Mr. Rutherford said, in introducing the report of the

FIRE, WATER AND GAS

Committee, that the indebtedness of Ashburnham in the matter of fire protection, amounting to $750, had been satisfactorily settled, and the money would be soon paid.

The report stated:

That in regard to the petition of Mr Pennestin and others, asking to have put down a hydrant at the corner of George and Smith streets, at the expense of the corporation, the committee cannot recommend such an expenditure, but would recommend that they get the properly signed petition as required by by-law.

Your committee recommend that the petition of W. H. Moore and others, asking to have the Water Company extend their mains along Lowe on street be granted, provided there is the required number of ratepayers, the Clerk to give the required notice to the Water Company.

With regard to the proposition of the Peterborough Water Company, asking for a settlement of water used on the streets outside of the hydrant limits, your committee decline to do anything in the matter, and would recommend the Council to decide the whole matter in Council.

A. RUTHERFORD,
Chairman.

The first two clauses of the report were adopted, and the Council went into Committee of the Whole on the third clause.

Mr. Rutherford read a communication from the Water Company, presenting the conditions on which the contract would be renewed. The complaint was made that the continual use of the hydrants were them so greatly that they would be inefficient for fire protection purposes, and they declined to renew the contract on the same terms, unless satisfactory arrangements were made. The Company suggested that, to save the hydrants, the town erect stand pipes in proper places.

Mr. Kelly strongly objected that, as part of the street watering was done by general tax, George street, which paid more than half of the town tax, should pay for its street watering by a local rate and pay its share of the general tax for watering outside streets. It was not right; it was not honest.

Mr. Rutherford retorted that the lamps on George street, cleaning George street, and other improvements were paid by general tax, and the local taxation men should be above complaining if a little water were put on outside streets. The Water Company complained that 10,023 lineal feet of street were watered outside the hydrant limits, and that the too liberal use of the hydrants injured and tended to wear them out.

The hour being too late to settle the matter at the present session,

Mr. Menzies moved, seconded by Mr. Cox, that a special meeting of the Council be called for Thursday night, August 31st, for the purpose of settling the amount to be paid the Water Company for extra water, taken for watering streets outside the fire limits, and also to receive petitions for hydrants, and also for renewing arrangements with Mr. McLennan for street watering, and that he go on in the meantime watering the streets.—Carried.

Mr. Douglass moved, seconded by Mr. Yelland, that the Street Inspector be instructed to put a sidewalk on the east side of Chambers street.—Referred to the Street and Bridge Committee.

Moved by Mr. Cahill, seconded by Mr. Rutherford, and resolved,—That it is desirable to erect substantial and permanent stone and iron bridges over the creek on Hunter and Simcoe street; and, whereas the necessary expenditure to make such improvements will be necessarily large, and it is not advisable to place such a large amount on the Collector's Roll for the current year, in addition to the ordinary expenditures, be it therefore resolved that the Street and Bridge Committee be authorized to consult with the Commissioners of the Town Trust for the purpose of obtaining the sum of $5,000, to be expended on stone and iron bridges as above, and that the Committee report to the Council; and that the Mayor be requested to call a special meeting (if necessary) to receive such report.

SONS OF SCOTLAND.

It was stated that a deputation of the Sons of Scotland, of Toronto, who intended coming down from Toronto on the excursion on the 18th, wished to get the Drill Shed grounds for pic-nic purposes, and the Mayor said he would grant permission.

Mr. Cahill—I wish we had a better place to offer them.

The Mayor—I wish we had, indeed.

COURT HOUSE PARK.

In answer to Mr. Davidson, Mr. Hartley stated that the matter would soon receive the attention of the Joint Committee.

GRAND TRUNK WORKSHOPS.

Mr. Rutherford moved, seconded by Mr. Millar, that in order to keep up the present prosperity, no opportunity should be lost sight of that would advance the interest of the ratepayers, be it therefore resolved that Gen. A. Cox, Mayor, James Stevenson, Chairman of Commissioners, and Wm. Clinton, President of the Peterborough Water Works Company, be sent as a deputation to visit Montreal to interview the authorities of the Grand Trunk Railway, with a view of having the local workshops of that large corporation established in this town.

Mr. Cox said that while not wishing to throw cold water on the scheme he thought that in the present undecided state of the policy of the Company in reference to such matters, from his knowledge of the intentions of the Company, the present was a bad time to press the matter. He thought everything he could, and offered large inducements to the G.T.R. Company, but the policy was at present unsettled. He was hopeful that the repair shops now at Belleville and Port Hope would yet be removed here. He had done all he could in the matter ever since he was Mayor.

Mr. Allin moved, seconded by Mr. Kelly, that the Street Inspector be directed to remove the stones from George street, south of Charlotte street, as soon as practicable.—Carried.

Council adjourned till Thursday night.

FETE OF THE FORESTERS.

Annual Outing to Orillia.

How the Representatives of Robin Hood Reserve—A Large Attendance—Handsome Enjoyment—Seeing the Sights—The Singing Match—The Home Lacrosse Club Laid Out in the Fourth Round—A Fine Run Home.

The annual excursion, run under the management of Court Peterborough of the Canadian Order of Foresters, was made over the Midland to Orillia on Thursday last. Promptly on time—so promptly, indeed, that about fifty passengers "were aboard (the platform of the station) that were left behind"—the train, consisting of thirteen coaches, besides baggage and lunch vans, and having on board about 550 passengers, drew out of the station. At Omemee a few persons, left over from the crowd that "took in" the circus held there the same day, boarded the train, and at a few more joined the party, enough to make the total number up to about 600. The run up northward was a very pleasant as well as rapid one. The party arrived in Orillia at eleven o'clock. Getting dinner was the first order. There were not many lunch baskets aboard, but these owning the assembled at Agricultural Hall, a fine, cleanly, cool building situated in a fine grove, where luncheon was eaten. The far larger number assembled at the hotels, which had, in expectation of the visitors, made preparations for them. Dinner discussed, visitors spent some time in viewing the

which every one pronounced Orillia to be. It is delightfully situated on delightful sheets of exquisite water. Its front Street is cleanly and brisk, and there are some exceedingly tasty and creditable business places thereon. Nature has done much for Orillia, and enterprise has ably seconded it. It is a town of only about 2,500, yet its civilization is well abreast of its size. It supports three creditable newspapers, the Times, Packet and News-Letter, and contains several creditable manufacturing establishments. Orillia is a little contradictory, however. While it has, for a town of its size, the largest number and best newspaper supply, to it also belongs the doubtful glory of containing more fools than any town of its size in Canada. The fools, however, are not all natives, but are the unfortunate tenants of the Provincial Idiot Asylums, situated there, and to which a great many morbid-minded excursionists paid visits during the day. A trim little steamer plied betwen the town and that charming spot, Couchiching Park. The larger proportion of the crowd, however, were attracted to the Agricultural Grounds to witness the

LACROSSE MATCH.

The clubs, headed by the band, marched to the grounds, when the following teams took part in the mingled match and measure that went on during the afternoon:

C. Rutherford	Goal	H. Taylor
Percy Miles	Point	W. Edmison
J. Henderson	Cover Point	R. H. Gunn
M. Tierney	Defence Field	C. Elliott
J. Howden	do.	J. B. Tadhope
W. J. Scott	do.	G. H. Armstrong
J. Sharp	Centre Field	R. C. Moore
R. H. Portis	Attack Field	Geo. Topps
M. Halpin	do.	R. H. Jupp
R. Kelly	do.	R. Henderson
H. Myers	2nd Home	W. A. Garrett
Geo. Giroux	1st do.	A. E. Lawrence
J. Coughlin	Field Captain	J. Rakston
E. Brown	Umpire	W. Sherman

Mr. Thompson, of Longford Mills, Vice-President of the Orillia Club, acted as Referee.

Just previous to the beginning of play the members of both teams were grouped and photographed by Mr. G. R. Whiten, Orillia's own and only photographer.

THE FIRST GAME—PETERBOROUGH.

At 2.25 play began. Sheehy secured the ball on the face, and the fun began right merrily. The ball travelled from end to end alternately, the Orillia goal, however, being being the favorite. At length Henderson, at cover point, got the ball nicely away from the Peterborough poles, and Howden, covering it, sent it down on the Orillia flags. It went behind, however, and Sheehy, being on hand, made a dandy drop shot in front of the goal, into Giroux's ready net, and the latter cleverly sent it home, winning the first game in six minutes.

THE SECOND GAME—ORILLIA.

Play was at once resumed, and the Orillias, seeing that their skill at Lacrosse would not defeat the Peterboroughs, changed their tactics and inaugurated what was apparently a "knock out" game. It was brutally rough, and had a bad effect on the home team, who are accustomed only to playing lacrosse. At length, after sixteen minutes' alleged play, R. Henderson, of the Orillias, put the rubber between the Peterborough poles.

THIRD GAME—ORILLIA.

The Orillias, finding rough play favorable to them, let it out another notch or two. This game was a long and rough one. Orillia's goal had several close calls. One time it looked to spectators as though Peterborough had got the ball between the flags, but the umpire decided otherwise, and the play went on, the rubber still lingering near Orillia's goal; but, after 31 minutes' time, R. Henderson again made a successful assault on Peterborough's flags.

FOURTH GAME—ORILLIA.

The fourth and last game opened with several dangerously close calls on Orillia's position, which were, however, averted. The home boys were playing splendidly. Sheehy and Miles got in some fine work, but a good deal of time was lost through fouls and rough play. Scott was placed hors de combat by a finishing blow to the others he had received, which for the time disabled his right hand, and he had to retire; Moore, of the Orillias, also withdrawing to balance the teams. A good deal of time was thus lost. Play was resumed, and the home lads made it repeatedly hot for the Orillia defence. Giroux, who played splendidly for some time, making repeated drops on their goal. But he soon was disabled, receiving underneath the eye a severe blow from the hand end of an opponent's stick that laid him prostrate on the field. He soon revived, but retired, and the game went on, with Lawrence dropped from the other side. After sixty-one minutes from the face, Jupp decided the fourth game in favor of the Orillias.

If the Orillias settled down to playing lacrosse they might make a fairly creditable showing. They have some good men on their team, Jupp, R. Henderson, Tadhope and Armstrong. Gunn, said to be of Barrie, and Edmison, another alleged imported man, added greatly to the strength of their team, while the Peterborough twelve was weakened by the absence of Yelland and Rudkins, two of the best and most effective players in the home club. Peterborough being thus weakened and Orillia unduly strengthened from without, combined with the heavish roughness of the Orillias' game, easily accounted for the defeat of the home club to what, compared with scientific lacrosse, it is no misnomer to call a slugging match.

There was a good crowd in attendance to witness the game, and the Fire Brigade Band furnished several selections of their first-class music.

THE HOMEWARD RUNNING.

A good many danced for lighter spirits assembled in the Agricultural Hall, where the excellent string band that accompanied the party furnished good music for dancing, and this amusement was well patronized and kept up with unflagging vim to the last moment.

Others spent their time in visiting the Idiot Asylums and regarding the interesting but rather melancholy spectacles they presented.

At half-past five the band marched playing down to the station, and concluded their day's work in Orillia by playing "Auld Lang Syne," and finishing with the National Anthem.

The excursion party left Orillia at about 6 o'clock, and, after a rattling good run, arrived in Peterborough at nine o'clock. Court Peterborough is to be congratulated upon the success of their annual excursion. The committee did everything in their power to contribute to the comfort and enjoyment of their patrons. The committee was composed of Messrs. R. H. Adams (chairman), A. McNeil (secretary), H. W. Watson, J. Fanning, F. W. Miller, R. McWhinnie, F. Perry, A. Riley, J. Gibbs and J. Kendry—the latter, however, was not on the excursion.

POINTS.

The party was exceedingly well behaved. True, some, over so little, under the influence of Orillia edamebeate, were a little demonstrative, but it was all good-natured and in no way offensive.

The Irish jig dancing in the smoking car, to the music of a well-played mouth organ, by an ex-hotel keeper and ex-Councillor, was no end of fun. It beat "speculation" all over.

A band of Saved Army soldiers kept up a pretty brisk fusilade of musical small arms during the journey up the line.

The crops along the line from Peterborough to Orillia were superb. Only one or two bad fields were noticed in the sixty-five miles distance.

The Excursion Committee had made specific arrangements with the hotel-keepers of Orillia that the price of dinner on Thursday was to be only 25 cents, but 25 cents was the invariable charge. Ten cents isn't much, but breaking a square bargain is a good deal. The hotel-keepers received the intimation in no equivocal terms that, as far as the Foresters were concerned, they had "killed the goose that laid the golden eggs."

Nearly all the lacrosse boys brought home sundry bruises and battenings as mementoes of the scrimmage with Orillia.

Why is Turnbull now offering large ranges of fresh goods at prices that will compete favorably with clearing sales? Because his goods are never mastered over a fair living profit, which any reasonable customer is willing to pay. His steadily increasing trade enables him to clear out all lines in the proper season, also because his long experience and close attention to business put him in a position to secure any really desirable job lines which are sometimes thrown on the market.

JUVENILE LACROSSE.

The Peterborough Infants Beat the Norwood Boys.

On Monday afternoon the return match between the Independents of Peterborough and the junior twelve of the Norwood lacrosse club took place here and resulted in a victory for the local twelve. The teams were composed as follows:

INDEPENDENTS.—J. Phelan, goal; J. McDonald, point; H. Robinson, cover point; F. Goyette, T. Meagher and Geo. Martin, defence field; John Bagley, centre field; J. Allen, W. Kelly and R. Traynor, attack field; Thos. Giroux, 2nd home; O. Watson, 1st home; R. S. Kelly, field captain; W. Giroux, umpire.

JUNIOR NORWOODS.—J. Kemp, goal; F. Stephenson, point; W. Douglass, cover point; T. Searight, H. Hill and L. Cope, defence field; D. Rahl, centre field; C. Brennan, R. Phillips and A. Eaton, attack field; R. McKelvie, 2nd home; R. J. Stewart, 1st home; F. Reynolds, field captain.

W. Welsh, of Peterborough, acted as Referee.

In physical proportions the visitors "laid over" the infants of the Independents considerably, but the latter made up in skill and play for their lack of weight.

The first game, the success was pretty evenly divided, but after five minutes varying play the Norwoods won the first game, McKelvie putting the ball through.

The second game was more closely contested. The boys from the village played largely on defence, and it was 35 minutes before Tommy Giroux, putting the ball between the poles, won the first game for the Independents and the second of the match.

The third game was the longest struggle of all, and was marked by a good deal of vigorous play, many wounds, more or less severe, having been given and taken. After 25 minutes from the face Watson scored the second game for the Independents.

Play was resumed, and after varying success, pretty evenly divided, Norwood, by a scuffle around the goal, got the ball through.

The fifth game was a little exciting. There were frequent faces, and a delay of ten minutes was caused by a Norwood lad being laid out, but at length the umpire of the Independents, who had had the advantage nearly all through the game, credited Traynor with putting the rubber in the right spot, thus winning the fifth game and the match.

Canadians at Wimbledon.

The Kolapore Cup Won by the Canadian Team.

The Kolapore cup for teams of eight selected from England and the colonies was won on Wednesday by the Canadian team by five points, the total score of the Canadians being six hundred and sixty points. The Canada club cup for the best aggregate was won by Mitchell. At the conclusion of the match the Duke of Cambridge inspected the Canadian team and warmly congratulated them on their great success.

The Canadians also won the Kolapore Cup in 1872, when the native militia in Canada, from which the men were taken, numbered less than 60,000 men. The team was then under the command of Major Worsley.

CHEESE MACHINERY.

To the Editor of the EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—To do justice to the Patent Cheese Machinery Co. of Belleville, please insert the following:—

Having heard a report circulated that I thought little of the machinery which I purchased from the above Company, I wish to state that I am perfectly satisfied with it, and I would not do without it by any means. I would advise factory men to call at my factory and see how nicely it does its work, and I think they would not be long without it. My men say if they had to work by hand they would have twice the work to do.

Funeral Reform.

That careful and well-considered reform is needed in the funeral rites and customs of the present day, will, we think, be readily admitted by all thoughtful and intelligent people. The unnecessary display and useless expense incurred in the burial of the dead, are not only repugnant to the good sense and fine taste of many in the community, but they are actually injurious and hurtful to the best interests of the living. Many a poor family has suffered keenly for months, owing to their morbid desire to inter their dead with all the pomps and pageantry they could command, and in imitation of their superiors. Simple funerals, whether of rich or poor, are, instinct; almost a thing of the past. Exceedingly bad taste is shown as well in the mourning worn by relatives, as in the mere funeral rites.

And yet, with all the existing need for reform, we well know how difficult the power of the press will find it to work the necessary improvement. Vested interests among commercial classes, custom among the enterprising middle class, and fashion amongst the aristocracy, unite their forces to oppose all reform. In order, therefore, to influence public opinion, it is of the first importance that those interested should themselves form clear views of what is amiss. In this way plans for improvement may be suggested which will disturb as little as possible, all existing manners and customs, and which, in consequence of this, may more readily be adopted.

There are certain first principles which enter into the consideration of this question, and which it may be well for us to re-affirm. The first great principle may thus be expressed:—"The burial of the dead is a work of piety, both to God and man."

The ancient Jews, the early Christians and well-known classical authors are here of one mind. The mournful and ever-recurring duty, so degraded as it has become by the necessities of trade, is, in fact, a work of mercy, on which the Christian church has everywhere set her approval.

Another principle which we think requires affirmation is, that when this life is ended, the human frame, being composed of dust, should be allowed at once to return, in the grave as naturally and with as little delay as possible, to its elemental dust.

If this proposition be accepted, the Scripture law of burial will not be contravened by a too durable material for the coffin, or of any enclosing fabric in the grave. And the body of the dead will not needlessly be exposed to any indignity, or be allowed to suffer violence in the fire or otherwise.

If the first principle were more generally accepted, we mean the religious side of the burial of the dead, as a work of piety and mercy it would, we think, prevent much unnecessary display in the way of imposing ceremonial, gorgeous hearses, and all the costly accessories which interested undertakers deem so essential. We could never understand why all interments should be conducted so regardless of good taste and feeling and in a manner, in fact, utterly repugnant to the wishes of the deceased's relatives. But the fact is, when a death occurs, we know not whereto do, and have no choice but to put ourselves into the hands of others. There is no written law regarding burial, and the consequence is, custom is closely observed and old traditions are faithfully followed. Those who take a morbid, a strange, an unaccountable interest in all appertaining to burial, seize hold of the opportunity and directions are given and commands issued, which, under other circumstances we should take as rude and uncalled for, if not positively insulting. Had we the desire to see things done differently, we are altogether powerless. We are driven hither and thither by others, and told such and such things must be done. There is little consultation as to one's wishes, and fear of being considered mean or unkind or unfeeling in departing from "custom" makes one submit, with a bad grace often, to the inevitable.

This is most unfortunate. An Englishman's house is supposed to be his castle. But at funerals, the owner, it will be admitted, can hardly be said to "hold the fort." Now, the only way to avoid this interference, which certainly tends to keep up the present expensive and gorgeous, in fact, heathenish, method of interment, and which greatly retards improvement in the mode of burial, funeral pageantry, mourning dress, &c., is for the leading citizens in every place to establish a Funeral Reform Association.

Its leading idea should be to secure more simplicity in burial, avoiding all display as destroying the idea of its being a work of piety, the members pledging themselves to carry out its rules on every opportunity.

We put this suggestion before our readers, and shall be glad if the subject commend itself to their minds, the question is a brief discussion on this page. We [illegible] return to the question, however, as a good deal has been left unsaid.

MIDLAND DISTRICT RACES.

REGISTERED.

Raspberries continue to come in plentifully. Huckleberries are not ripe yet, and will be a short crop.

The committee members of the English church tea-fight's lattice lamp-work, and cleaned up the grounds around the church. It is a great improvement, and together with the new picket fence, gives the impression, of at least, life and energy among the congregation.

SEYMOUR.

The Council of the Township of Seymour recently instructed Mr. W. E. Biddell, of Cobourg, to enter an appeal according to the assessment act with the County Judge. The amount to be paid by the township was placed at $1092, and of the amount paid for some years back by this township was only about $600, such a large advance was felt to be unjust. At the hearing before Judge Clark, his Honor after hearing the evidence and arguament of counsel, reduced the rate from $1092 to $679, the difference, $413, to be divided rateably amongst the municipalities not appealing and added to their county rate. Look after your assessment.

NORWOOD.

Commencing on Monday, 28th Inst., we are to have four mails, daily—two from the East and the same number from the West. Truly, we are advancing!

The naturally beautiful pic-nic grounds on Mr. Glover's property, east of Mill street, have been greately improved, through the energy of a few of our leading citizens. Tickets have been distributed through the grove, seats and swings erected, and a good cooking stove for the benefit of visitors. Norwood may now lay claim to having as fine pic-nic grounds as there is in the Province.

A deputation from L. O. L. No. 34, Norwood, consisting of Messrs. W. H. Stephenson, J. P. Brown, and W. B. Hutchinson, waited on the Rev. J. Carmichael, M. A., on Tuesday evening last, and presented him with an address and a purse containing a sum of money. For lack of space we are obliged to leave a detailed account of the affair over till next issue.

PORT HOPE.

The posters for the Port Hope Agricultural exhibition Oct. 7-8., have been issued, $2.000 will be offered in prizes.

A mile and a half dash, between Dickson's colt and Fox's (Cobourg)colt, for $100 a side, will take place at the Park track on Friday, August 1st.

On Saturday night some mean spirited heedless went to the stables of the American hotel, and maliciously damaged a top buggy belonging to Mr. McNaughton, by hacking it with a jackknife.

The crops in the different sections around Port Hope are looking in splendid condition Spring and fall wheat will yield a heavy crop. Oats and barley will also be heavy. Farmer's are nearly through with the hay, which is quite equal to last year's crop. Field roots are looking well.

The high school improvements are being pushed forward with all possible despatch. The fence has been taken down and the ground made level. The front is to be boulevarded, new sidewalks laid down, and trees planted. Tenders will be received at the next meeting of the Board for inside alterations, building an addition the west and and raising the tower.

Turnbull's hands are busy measuring all short ends and matching them at prices that are sure to effect a sale where the length will suit.

OUR TERRITORIAL EXTENT.

If Sir John Macdonald had had his own way Ontario in area would have been smaller than Quebec or Manitoba, though in population one this Province is nearly three quarters of a million ahead of Quebec. Now that Mr. Mowat has won for us our legal limits the Premier Province surpasses all the older Provinces in extent, and all the new ones except British Columbia.

The area of the Provinces and territories are now as follows:—

Province	sq miles	Population
Ontario	220 000	1 923 228
Quebec	188 000	1 359 027
New Brunswick	27 000	321 233
Nova Scotia	20 000	440 572
Manitoba	115 000	65 954
British Columbia	341 000	49 459
Prince Edward Island	2 000	108 891
Assiniboia	96 000
Saskatchewan	114 000
Alberta	100 000
Athabasca	122 000
Keewatin	320 000

The Province of Ontario has been laid under an everlasting debt of gratitude to the Mowat Ministry for their patriotic efforts to secure for the Province her territorial rights so that as regards area and resources, as in population, Ontario will be second to none in the Confederation.

TORN TO DEATH BY A MAD DOG.

On Friday morning a large Newfoundland dog, belonging to Jas. Cooply, a Lake Shore Railway conductor Cleveland Ohio, went mad and fearfully lacerated the body of an 11 year-old son of Cooply. The mother went out, and on returning, heard cries. Rushing to the house she found the dog with his teeth fastened in the boy's leg. She drove him away and went to get a doctor, only to hear more cries. Again returning she found that the dog had jumped through the window, and was tearing the boy to pieces. She pushed her foot into the animal's mouth, and he released the boy, attacking her, and tearing her leg badly. The neighbors, attracted by her cries, came in and beat the dog's head to pieces. The child will die, as he is terribly mangled, the flesh on his face, head, arms and back, hanging in shreds where it is not eaten off.

Solid Comfort.

Every one likes to take solid comfort and it may be enjoyed by every one who keeps Kidney-Wort in the house and takes a few doses at the first symptoms of an attack of Malaria, Rheumatism, Biliousness, Jaundice or any affection of the Liver, Kidneys or Bowels. It is a purely a vegetable compound of roots, leaves and berries known to have special value in kidney troubles. Added to these are remedies acting directly on the Liver and and Bowels. It removes the cause of disease and fortifies the system against new attacks.

"The development at the back of the head my friends, indicates parental affection," explained the phrenologist. "Now you will observe," he went on, feeling on the boy's head, "that this bump is abnormal in size, thus indicating that he loves and reveres his parents to an unusual degree. Is this not so my lad?" "Naw" "What's that? You do not love your parents!" "I think well enough of ma," the boy replied, "but I ain't very fond of the old man. The bump you're feelin' of, he giv' me last night with a lacrosse stick."

James Brayley, Hamilton, says:—"I read the testimonials for McGregor's Speedy Cure and found that I had not to go to New York Philadelphia, Louisiana or Texas to find living witnesses of its value, we had plenty of persons right here to prove its merits. I got a bottle and it helped me right away, I was so bad with Bilious Fever and Indigestion as I think any one could be, I have taken three bottles and am nearly well and can eat any kind of food without hurting me. I may say that I am better than I ever expected to be." Free Trial bottles at J. McKee's Drug Store 31-2t

Hints to Clergymen.

While fully recognizing the value of alcohol and other stimulants under special circumstances, while admitting that their moderate use is comparatively harmless to health, Dr. Lauder Brunton speaks very forcibly on the subject of intemperance, and points out the evil effects of stimulants upon the health of the persons who cannot be called intemperate, yet who are in constant habit of taking very small quantities of wine, beer or spirit at all hours throughout the day. The following table of comparative mortality is instructive:

An intemperate person's change of living is:	A temperate person's chance of living is:
At 25—16.5 years.	At 25—44.5 years.
At 35—12.5 years.	At 35—32.5 years.
At 45—11.6 years.	At 45—24.5 years.
At 55—10.5 years.	At 55—21.25 years.
At 65—8.5 years.	At 65—14.265 years.

In these days, when there is so much talk about overwork of the brain, is is not a little encouraging to find an eminent authority stating that for one instance in which the brain is overworked there must be many hundreds or thousands of cases it is not used enough, even for the ordinary conditions of health. And yet, although the brain may suffer from want of exercise, the evils of over-strain—especially in the case of young people—must be fully recognized. Evening preparation of school lessons is not without its dangers; night work often causes sleeplessness and a long train of attendant evils, and contributes largely to the nervousness and debility which are becoming so common among school children, particularly in towns, while it fails in securing advancement at all equal to what might be got from much less strenuous and protracted study earlier in the day. The most arduous mental work required of a child ought to be imposed on it when mind and body are in their prime vigor, between 9 a. m. and noon, and certainly nothing but the lightest work should devolve upon it after 5 p. m. Questions of food, drink and labor naturally lead on to another important health consideration—rest and sleep. It cannot be denied that, as a rule, the largest amount of the best work in life is done by those who can sleep well. Nor to a healthy man is any amount of work—apart from worry and anxiety—injurious when it is followed by a due amount of sound sleep. What is a due amount varies widely in different persons. "This is due in part to the varying degrees of activity of the vital changes. Thus, although these are most active in the young, the young require much sleep, because the rapid rate of repair during that period is met by the rapid rate of waste during the day. Both by day and night the changes are then most active. The aged also require much sleep, because, although there is comparatively little waste during the day, the process of repair is slow also." Harassed brain workers should encourage sound sleep as much as possible if they wish to preserve their health and strength. Late meals should be avoided, and mental work should be put aside at least an hour or two hours before retiring to rest. To sum up the whole matter: How is health to be preserved? By temperate and discriminate use of food and drink; by due exercise of both mind and body, but with the avoidance of worry, and of haste to get wealthy or to acquire all knowledge; by attention to all natural health laws, such as the need for pure air, clothing adapted to climate and the body of the wearer, etc.; and by paying due regard to the necessity of sleep and rest. From such things result "a sound mind in a sound body," and a healthy and vigorous old age, with all the faculties unimpaired.

The Baboon and the Ostrich.

The baboon was on good terms with all the animals of the neighborhood, but took a great dislike to some ostriches which wandered about and often came close to him, not apparently that they were necessarily unbeloved by apes, but because they did some very evil services unintentionally. He liked to get on a wall under a quantity of straw, which protected him from the sun, and there he dozed away. Now the ostrich has a very bad habit of trying to swallow or peck at everything; nothing comes amiss so that it can be swallowed, and they one and all are constantly poking here and poking there for most curious tid-bits. This was the case with the ostriches in the baboon's neighborhood, and it now and then happened that as they were on the search for a novelty they noticed his fine stout tail hanging from the top of the wall. Of course the first ostrich which was near gave it a good peck with his strong beak, and doubtless a good pull also. This was a most uncalled liberty, and not only woke up the sleeper and hurt him, but offended his dignity. He awoke full of rage, and before the ostrich could give a second pull at the grisly morsel the furious baboon rushed from under the straw, seized his enemy by the neck, and cuffed his head most soundly. He hated ostriches ever after.—Cassel's Illustrated Natural History.

The countries where Cholera prevails, as in India, China and Africa, Pain-Killer is considered the surest and safest of all known remedies, and the natives place the most perfect reliance in it.

Read the following extract from the letter of a missionary in China:

DEAR SIRS:—I ought to have acknowledged long ago the box of Pain-Killer you had the goodness to send me last year. Its coming was most providential. I believe hundreds of lives were saved, under God, by it. The Cholera appeared here soon after we received it. We gave it freely to the Poor-Killer, Mary's Arrested for Cholera. A few were kept of all to whom the Pain-Killer was given, and the native assistants assured us that eight out of every ten to whom it was prescribed, recovered.

The Face in the Moon.

We had all observed for some time that Tom Eaton had been unlike himself. Originally a good-natured sort of chap, without much facility in painting, to be sure, but with any amount of ambition, he had pleased up all. The clever but sharp criticisms on his pictures what had been accepted by the hanging committees and the innumerable rejections he had sustained at their hands, seemed at last to have really turned his temper. He grew blue, somber, now and again gruff, and singularly loquacious on the subject of his art. He would orate by the hour on theories of painting, and was sometimes ingenious if obscure. I was talking to Gleason Tower about him one day, and Gleason, who deals in caustic speeches, said: "Sum up Tom Eaton, and he is a good example of a limited man with an unlimited ambition. He was supposed to have great talent, and started out in life under the impression that he was a genius. He lived in this dream for a while; now he is waking to find he is only an ordinary sort of man like the rest of us. It makes him mad, or if he is 'not mad he soon will be,' if he goes about with his notions and talk."

A week or so later, Eaton monopolized an evening at the Kit-Kat club by giving us his new views on art. Art meant only portraiture. Everything else, from still life up to landscape, was a mere accessory. He really dawdled on with his thoughts though, his words flew fast enough, and I felt as if he were killing his friendships as I glanced about the room and saw numerous indications of suppressed yawns.

It was so. Gleason Tyrner said: "Eaton has rung his own death-knell. He belongs in an insane asylum, not in an art club."

"I really think his brain is cracked," suggested Bob Langley. "They say he has an uncle who—"

But here one was treated with specimens of a new model, and we dropped upon Eaton.

* * * * * * *

I do not believe I gave the fellow a thought again until he chanced upon me the next summer while I was staying in an out-of-the-way village in Maine, on a sketching excursion. One day, in July, I stumbled upon Eaton sitting out under his umbrella, painting.

"Hello, old man! given up portraits?" I called, remembering by the association of ideas his talk the last time I saw him.

"No; this is a portrait," and he turned his easel toward me to display a most indifferent figure of an Irish woman with a basket in her hand.

He held his brush idly for a moment, and then looked up at me quickly.

"I have come here to see you," he said abruptly. "I heard you were here. Will you go rowing with me to-night? I have something to say to you—a secret. I have come all this distance to find you, for say it I must."

I will confess to a vague remembrance of Eaton's queer ways, but I am not half a bad fellow, and was, moreover, a trifle flattered at this proof of confidence and friendship, so I consented.

"At 8?" he asked.

"At 8," I answered.

"Meet me here at this point if you will. I shall be busy until then, and do not care to see you and idly chat over nothing while my secret chokes in my throat."

He laughed uneasily.

"In love," thought I; "and I shall lie in a boat and listen to descriptions of her beauties and her charms all night. Hello-ho!"

At 8 o'clock precisely I had reached the point, but Eaton was there before me sitting in the boat, oars in hand, paddling about uneasily. He had doffed off his coat, and as he will a fine, brawny fellow, I looked at him with considerable satisfaction.

"What a Hercules you are!" I cried.

"And what a crab, a turtle, are you! Get in."

As I jumped into the boat, annoyed by his tone, which was almost savage, I stumbled against his paint-box and a big bit of canvas.

"What are these things doing here?" I queried, as I sat down in the stern of the boat.

"They go where I go," he replied. "They are my tools."

We did not speak for some time. Eaton pulled hard and fast, and I lay back with my hands under my head and looked up at the sky. It was just before moonrise, and the heavens were in their golden glorious expectancy. I did not care to break the silence. The secret of the night was grander and more interesting than any petty human confidence could be. Eaton spoke first.

"You are not curious?"

"I beg your pardon; I am really."

He was silent again for a few moments.

"I am going to be a great painter," he said abruptly.

Ah! It was not a love secret then!

"But to accomplish my end I must take terrible means. I must condemn myself to years of agony. I must condemn who another being to a briefer but very horrible torture."

"You!" I replied, as the [illegible] no much expression as I could into the words.

My mind, curiously enough, reverted back to another moonlit night when I was quite a lad, and when I sat in the stern of the boat with such a beautiful little girl. Anita Grayson by name, a child of 12, perhaps. Some one sitting by had said, "Anita looks like the moon," and I had watched her during the rest of the evening and wondered why, and gone home to dream that I saw the moon in the water, and that it had Anita's face in it. While I was dimly recalling this, and half listening to my friend, I became suddenly quite roused from my dream. Eaton had been saying something about his incapacity to catch a likeness.

"I cannot make the people I paint impress me. One rose follows another swiftly, and my model flits away with those spectres. Now, only one thing can impress a face upon my mind, I feel sure—impress it so that it will stay by me and haunt me by day and outlet itself on my soul at night. I have thought it all over. There is but one way.

God help me! I must commit a crime. I must kill some one! That face—the face—will haunt me, I shall die only then, and I can paint it. You see, I am quite calm in this matter. I have reasoned the thing out. I am a good man; my bitterness of spirit will harass me into work. I shall hold my brush with remorse. I shall paint a great, a terrible picture!"

Great heavens! Gleason was right. This is a madman, I thought, and glanced about with my mental eye to take in the situation. It must be strategy versus strength. I saw that at a glance. I must not betray the slightest fear. His plan was settled. I must plot to defeat it. In the first place I must gain time. This might be only wild talk.

"Whom do you propose to kill?" I inquired nonchalantly, although my heart seemed to stand still as I waited for his answer. He stilled his oars, and I could hear them drip, drip in the moment's silence.

"I propose to drown a man," he said. "Then I will tie him to my boat—this, my boat, that you and I are in—and let him float. I shall drink in the sight of that floating face in the dark water, with the moonlight about it, and the world that has scorned me will hold its breath."

"An original plan, indeed," I replied. "Have you chosen your man?"

"I have chosen you."

"You should have selected a handsomer face, or at least have made him shave before starting. A bearded face in the water is—pshaw! very bad. Don't you see?"

My voice sounded steady, and I was lost in admiration of myself as a man of nerve. "Don't you see?" I repeated.

"I shall see, for I shall paint it! You take it coolly," he continued, eyeing me warily.

My thoughts were flying about in confusion. I could not swim. Eaton knew it. I am a slight man, a mere nothing to this Hercules. No help, indeed, but by my wits. If I was cool so was he. I must try a new tack, unsettle the fixed idea that anchored his wild fancy and gave him this terrible strength of purpose.

"A woman's face would have been better," I suggested. "Something really poetic about that, now! Ah, look there!" I cried, an idea striking me, and pointing as I cried out to the moon mirrored in the water. She had risen, but had been cut off from us in the heavens by a ledge of rock at our left, just beyond this her counterfeit presentment shone round and full in the water. "Look there!"

"What do you see?" cried Eaton, his voice trembling with excitement, his whole body eagerly bent forward.

"A woman's face in the moon in the waves!" I called, gazing fixedly as if at a vision. "What a brooding face! What shadowy hair! What a slow smile! And her eyes! Ah! do you see her eyes? She has opened them! Have you killed her?"

"I swear to you, no!" cried Eaton; "I swear to you, no! I know no such woman! I have never killed her! I have not even broken her heart! Tell me more about her!"

"She is young, very mystical, yet very real, with a smile at one side of her mouth, while the other looks quite grave."

This was a characteristic of Anita's mouth, and it was she I was describing—Anita as I fancied her grown older, for I had not seen her, scarcely indeed thought of her, since that day when we were children.

"It's a pity you can't paint her for me," said Eaton impetuously, as he gazed at the moon. "I don't quite see her, but she sounds great."

"I might try to paint her to-morrow," I suggested, taking a cigarette from my pocket, and relapsing into my calm manner again.

"To-morrow—to-morrow will be too late. But you shall paint her to-night—now, before I kill you."

He put up his oars as he spoke and came toward me, drawing a rope through his heavy hands. He was in a state of wild excitement, and I felt my light, airy manner slipping away as he approached. I was chilly as—as my watery grave was like to be. Yet I let him bind me hand and foot, and instinctively counted his deep breaths the while by way of something to do. A lurch, a struggle, and I should have been overboard and lost. Now that there seemed a chance for life, I was in terror, and I was more than half out of my senses as I watched my Charon lay me on the hither side of his stream. He took me from the boat as if I had been a child. Then he built a fire.

"I can paint scenes by firelight," he cried, and unfastening my hands set his canvas and easel before me, gave me a brush and bade me begin.

"I must do it in grays or browns. It must be a monochrome, or we shall ruin it." I spoke impatiently. So I did it in grays. The jut of black rock, the waves, the moon resting on the waves, and little Anita's face, with the half-solemn, half-smiling look upon it.

The strange scene, the maniac beside me, my own former fear and present excitement and the stirring of my fancy gave me a certain fictitious strength. In less than an hour, as I should think, I had finished my sketch. It was certainly weird and, as it seemed to me, strong. In the distance I half suggested the boat, and two men in it, one gazing eagerly toward the moon and the face, and the other lying in the stern, his arms over his head, his eyes toward the heavens. The boat and the men were small and well in the shadow.

"Bravo! bravo!" cried Eaton. "Don't touch it again! Give me the brush! Here," and snatching it from my fingers he wrote his name, "Thomas Eaton," in bold black letters under the boat. "This is my work, remember—mine, not yours. It will be a great success, and you"—he paused and looked at me—"you have saved your life." Saying which he jumped into his boat with my sketch, laughed a harsh, bleak sort of laugh, and rowed away around the ledge of rock.

For a few moments I sat still thinking it over—the strange, ridiculous, yet almost tragic scenes. "I am not sure that little Anita didn't save my life after all," I thought to myself.

It did not take me long to get out of my close quarters, but the walk home over the dreary, rough coast was long, and it was late before I reached the village. What a strange, eerie walk it was, with the sea chewing the moist air, and the moon contracting and expanding before my eyes through the mist that had risen. Anita shared the walk with me.

I found a telegram telling me of my father's dirty illness, illness at Baden Baden, and I was busy packing and driving through the chill, early morning toward the nearest railway station, so that I had no chance to look up Eaton. I remember that I told my driver something about an artist, a friend of mine who had turned up, who seemed wrong in his mind, and ought to be looked after. I believe I wrote a line to the same effect to Gleason. I know I meant to do so. But the anxious voyage and more anxious weeks in Europe put all other thoughts from my mind.

* * * * * *

It was after my father's death late in the fall that I sailed for home. Taking up a paper that came out on the pilot-boat I saw the name of poor Tom Eaton, who had died in a mad-house the week before. "An unsuccessful but painstaking artist," the review went on to say, "is a somewhat surprising fact the only work he has left of any strength should now be hung at the black and white exhibition. This sketch was made after his madness was fairly upon him. This picture is in grays, oddly colored, but in composition and drawing quite full of a certain weird power. Not to be too fanny at a dead man's expense, this gives the poor fellow a good send-off at any rate, as a friend of his remarked the other day. The picture, taken in connection with the tragic death of the artist, has created some little stir, more particularly as the face in the sketch is strikingly like that of a young Boston beauty who is making her debut in New York."

So poor Eaton was dead, and his picture—my picture—was a success, and—Anita had lived in Boston when she was 13!

I hurried to the black and white that very afternoon, and found quite a group collected about my picture—Eaton's picture. I laughed somewhat nervously as I stood before it. Some one behind me spoke. It was Gleason. "You needn't laugh, man, I am glad to see you back, by the way. There is some force in that, and I am glad for poor Tom's sake that he has left this sketch behind him. I give you my word I had no idea he could do as well. He couldn't have while he was sane. Every one is surprised. How are you? You look pale. Have you come back to stay?" etc., etc. I lingered around for awhile and found myself back again, and again before my picture (Eaton's picture), the picture never to be claimed as mine now. It chanced I had told the story to no one. There had been no opportunity. Now, of course, I never must. As I stood looking at it, and somewhat moved, perhaps, more by the remembrance of that night than by anything actually before my eyes, two girls and an elderly woman approached and stopped.

"It certainly is like her, mamma; I wonder if she will see it herself. It is quite time she were here, by-the-by. She promised to meet us at 3, you know."

"I don't think it does her justice," replied the elder lady, looking through her glasses critically. "She is a very beautiful creature, and this face is less so," she added rather indefinitely, and with some hesitation in her voice, so that I fancied the picture grew on as she looked, and that she might yet reverse her decision.

The other girl spoke now. She had a discerning face, as I could see, and that long upper lip that goes with speech-faculty. "It is like," she said, "more like her soul than her body. It is like the way she will look to her guardian angel—or her lover." She turned abruptly to greet some people who were walking toward us.

I was singularly excited. The maniac in the boat had no such paralyzing power over me as this potentiality in a soft gray gown, with a long gray glove outstretched. My heart beat and the picture swam before my eyes, for this might be; might it not, Anita herself? I heard a voice exclaim. "This is the picture!" A lady in black with the gray girl began an apology: "We are late. As usual, Signor Boldini and some new music. Ah!" interrupting herself, "it is like—why, yes, very. Don't you think so yourself?"—the name at last, surely—but no—"don't you think so yourself, dear?"

"Yes, do tell us what you think. Isn't she weird? and can you look like that?" cried the girls.

"Ah, the other me!" said a new voice softly a voice with a low thrill in it. "It is like what I might have been, I'm sure. Some one told me once when I was a child, I remember, that I was like the moon, but having lived eight years since then in a flood of sunshine"—and the gray hand touched the black glove near hers, a grateful touch, I felt sure—"why, I am not so much like it now as I was."

"In spite of the smile that you always will and always won't smile outright. That is in the face in the moon, too, you see. Did you ever meet Mr. Eaton?"

"And do you think the girl very beautiful, and very like a maniac's dream?" broke in the shorter girl. "Do tell us, Anita."

So then it was Anita. I turned, and as I walked away faced the blue-gray eyes, like violets, and the hair like shaded moonbeams, and the smile. Not the little 12-year-old Anita this, but a beautiful, sunny creature, with the other Anita somehow suggested, and yet not there. This one more of the world, with a savoir faire lying over the moonshine. I had meant, if it were she, to speak to her at once and boldly. As it was, I simply gazed, and when her eyes met mine I fear it was I, not she, who blushed. But she recognized me. My identity was all in my face, I am sure. I saw a puzzled look in her eyes, and I seized my chance. I bowed; I spoke:

"Years ago you knew me, Miss Grayson, when I was a boy in Boston, and when you were like the moon."

I was introduced to the aunt in black. My father had been one of the old family friends. So in a few moments I was talking like an old friend myself. Mrs. Grayson touched on my recent loss, and then, as I turned to leave, said:

"I should be glad to know your father's son. Can you dine with us on Sunday next?"

* * * * * * *

So the golden gates were opened for me, and Sundays came and Sundays went and I was fathoms deep in love. I could not paint, I could not talk. I heard a good deal of music, and I suppose—alack and alas—read poetry. Fatal habit of lovers. And so at last it came to the point when I must tell her. Armed with a shield of violets I met her in her aunt's drawing-room one Sunday again toward twilight. A day in April it was, and spring was in the air.

The aunt was out on an errand or [illegible], would soon be at home, Anita hoped. I said nothing. Talk flagged in consequence.

"If those violets are for this house, why do you hold them?" asked Anita; "why do you not give them to me?"

"I hold them because you will soon touch them yourself"—which was an asinine speech. Wasn't it?

"That is stupid," she laughed frankly, "and like other men, and not like you."

"But I am like other men," I answered, abruptly, "for I—" Then I paused, gave her the violets, and conversation flagged again. We tried various subjects—Russian dynamite, Scalchi; all failed.

"How good Aunt Emily is!" cried Anita at last in enthusiasm—"so full of thought for the poor and needy. I wish I had ever done any one any good."

"You saved my life once," I said. I must have said it very earnestly, for Anita flushed and then paled.

"Why must you jest with me in this way to-day? You are breaking our friendship."

"I want no friendship from you. I am glad to break it. I will tell you how you saved my life if you will say Yes to a question I am going to ask. But you must look at me and not at the violets."

* * * * * * *

And so all the debut went for nothing, and the swells and the lordlings that had hung about got their congé, and I got my moonlight; for the girl with the long upper lip—who, by the way, is now my cousin—was right, and Anita was the moon Anita to her lover.

In the course of time we married. Such a bald statement of an idyllic fact! But that is all that words can do—only half tell any tale. Our secret and our love and how she looks to me still are all told to us silently by a picture that hangs over the fireplace in our nursery, for there is a nursery as well as a studio, and the picture is the picture of a moon with a face in it, and in bold black letters the name of the artist—Thomas Eaton.

A certain brown-haired baby boy, on being held up to warm his wee toes by the open fire, always stretches his hands toward the face in the moon and coos: "My mamma! my mamma!"—Our Continent.

HALL'S

was the first preparation judiciously adapted to cure diseases of the scalp, and the first successful restorer of faded or gray hair to its natural color, growth, and youthful beauty. It has had many imitators, but none have as fully met all the requirements needful for the proper treatment of the hair and scalp. HALL'S HAIR RENEWER has steadily grown in favor, and spread its fame and usefulness to every quarter of the globe. Its unparalleled success can be attributed to but one cause: the entire fulfilment of its promises.

The proprietors have often been surprised at the receipt of orders from remote countries, where they had never made an effort for its introduction.

The use for a short time of HALL'S HAIR RENEWER wonderfully improves the personal appearance. It cleanses the scalp from all impurities, cures all humors, fever, and dryness, and thus prevents baldness. It stimulates the weakened glands, and enables them to push forward a new and vigorous growth. The effects of this article are not transient, like those of alcoholic preparations, but remain a long time, which makes its use a matter of economy.

PETERBOROUGH, JULY 31, 1874.

Ontario's Triumph.

The result of Mr. Mowat's appeal to the Privy Council jointly with Manitoba, in reference to the north-western boundaries of this Province, is a signal victory for Hon. Mr. Mowat, as representing Ontario. The decision of the Privy Council pratically gives to this Province the territory named in the award of the Arbitrators. This means an addition of nearly 100,000 square miles, or about sixty-four millions of acres to the territorial area of Ontario. This new territory, which was ours since the delivery of the Award of the Arbitrators, August 3rd, 1878, is rich in timber and minerals, the settlement and improvement of which have been delayed by the Dominion Government refusing to give effect to the Award by confirmatory legislation—to make it legally, as the decision itself made it morally binding. The refusal to ratify the Award has resulted in great injury to the territory. The Dominion Government has distributed out of it thirty extensive timber limits amongst its political hangers-on, to make money out of unjustly, and given a belt of 40 miles wide, through the heart of it, to the C.P.R. Syndicate; but now that the territory is ours, a day of reckoning will speedily come.

It is, perhaps, worth while to inquire as to whom is responsible for the delay that has taken place in the settlement of this question. The Tory papers assert that if Ontario had heeded Dominion ministers the matter might have been settled ten years ago. But what are the facts? The Award, as already stated, was made Aug. 3rd, 1878. At the very next session of the Ontario Legislature the Ontario Government introduced and passed an Act giving its assent, as required by the conditions of reference, to the award. But the Dominion Government took no such action, though eight despatches were sent from Toronto urging their duty upon them. Only evasive replies were received, during the three years elapsing since 1878. The ninth despatch from Mr. Mowat, sent on December 18th, 1881, brought, on January 27th, 1882, an answer announcing the policy of the Federal Government to be repudiation of the award! The reasons for the assumption of this position are interesting. Sir John recognised the authority of the Arbitrators by voting for a grant of $15,000 to meet their expenses. He also acknowledged the correctness of the Award, for on his coming into power one of his first departmental acts was the issue, under his own directions as Minister of the Interior, of a map of the North-west, which gave Ontario the territory assigned her by the Award of the Arbitrators, delivered only two months previously. But why the change of attitude? Mr. Mousseau's threat; that was the reason, as explained by that gentleman himself, when he said:

"I laid down the condition on which we (the Quebec Ministry) would be members of the Government at Ottawa. I said that if the Provinces of Ontario to acquire an additional territory of 50,000 acres more than she was given under the British North American Act, Quebec would have the right to demand an equivalent."

Then, Sir John, on the threat from the French members of his Cabinet, chose to adopt the expedient of delay to release him from the dilemma he was placed in.

The Ontario Government did not oppose a proper reference of the matter to the Privy Council. As early as 1874 a resolution was passed by the Legislative Assembly, approving of such a reference, and that with an express proviso in respect of the interim custody of the lands in the unsettled territory. Subsequently, however, a mutual agreement for reference to arbitration was agreed upon. The arbitration was held, a decision rendered, only to be repudiated at the instance of Sir John Macdonald, under Bleu pressure. Hon. Mr. Mowat never refused to refer the matter to the Privy Council. In a despatch to the Secretary of State, Ottawa, he said that he would be willing, with the concurrence of the Legislature, to submit the matter to the Privy Council on condition of consent being given by the Dominion Government to just arrangements for the government of the territory in the meantime. And to the same point are his remarks at the Liberal Convention in Toronto. He said:

"It is said that Sir John Macdonald is a pretty astute man, and I have no doubt he is, but I felt that, acting for the Province of Ontario, it was my duty to take care that the great man did not get the better of me in this matter. (Cheers and laughter.) If I had at once blindly consented to the proposal without any conditions, or without the conditions which ought to accompany such a proposal, of having the matter left to the Privy Council, then I would have allowed my seat to be caught by Sir John Macdonald. (Laughter.) He has not caught me yet and I don't think he will. (Applause.)

"There is one of the greatest importance to me and to the people of Ontario, and that is the question of the boundaries between this Province and the Province of Manitoba. I will not say that I will not yield to the decision of the Privy Council, but I will say that I will not yield to anything else. (Applause.) It is a disgrace to a civilized country that a territory of 100,000 square miles should be kept in dispute for seven years, and I will not be a party to any such thing. (Applause.) I will do my duty to the utmost in order that this matter may be settled, and I will not be a party to any settlement that will not be satisfactory to the Province of Ontario. I am not afraid of their decision, if they will consent to this, and I should let them quite willing to give them any reference they choose. (Applause.) I have no fear of the Province of Manitoba, but I don't want the territory to be stripped of its timber, and I don't think the Dominion Government could justly contend within that time if they live so long." (Laughter.)

The Muskoka Victory.

On Wednesday last the election was held in Muskoka, and resulted in the triumphant return of the Reform candidate, Mr. J. W. Dill, by a majority of 122, while Mr. Fenquier's purchased majority at the election of 1882 was 209. Mr. Dill's victory will thus be seen to be an unusually pronounced one. On this occasion he had the whole strength of the Dominion and the efforts of the bribery brigade against him. The result is a sort of glory to Big Push, Shields, and others of the brigade, who were in hiding from the Bribery Commission during the recent contest and the result took them by surprise. The heroes who could turn the tide of battle were hors du combat. When they had full swing in 1882 their candidate was elected by 209 majority, although the "trail of the serpent" was over the victory, for the member-elect was disqualified, and their fraudulent victory nullified.

The peculiarities in the nomination of the candidates of the recent election are remarkable. Mr. Dill was duly elected by acclamation on the declaration of the Returning Officer, and he, was, to say the least of it, gratuitously generous in waiving his right and giving the Tory candidate a chance for nomination. This was an act of generosity and fair fairness which redounds far more to Mr. Dill's credit as a man than a politician. While his admirers applaud, his opponents will only sneer; for the magnanimity of the act was one which is beyond the appreciation of the party, and never can and never will enter as an element into Conservative ideas of liberal treatment of opponents. The axis of the world will wear out before a Tory politician will be found to resign such an advantage.

The Chieftain's Stultification.

Since the Imperial Privy Council has decided that the western boundary of Ontario is at the north-west angle of the Lake of the Woods, all the Tory organs shout that they knew that was the right point. This servile imitation of Right-about Meredith's political style, comes in contact, however, with the following denunciation of the boundary fixed by the Arbitrators, made by Sir John in his speech before the House of Commons in March, 1881:—

"The effect of settling the boundary between these Provinces will compel, I do not say the Province of Ontario, but the present Government of Ontario, to be reasonable, and not to insist upon a boundary which cannot be supported in any court or tribunal in the world. They will come to terms quickly enough when they find that they must do so. To use an expression which is common enough in Scotland, it is land hungry they are for that country, and they are resolved to get it rightly or wrongly."

The Privy Council has had no respect for Sir John's infallibility, and has decided that the boundary was supported in the highest "tribunal in the world."

And again the premier asserted:

"According to my idea the whole case was given away before the arbitrators. Anybody reading the case would see that it was most wretchedly managed on the part of the Dominion. An inferior man, though a respectable man in his way, Mr. McMahon, was chosen to conduct the whole case, instead of employing the first legal ability in the country, instead of the Minister of Justice himself conducting the case before the Arbitrators. The whole case was thrown away—it look almost as if it was deliberately thrown away. Never was such a case so given away as the case of the Dominion was on the very face of it."

Yet Sir John employed this very McMahon to try before the Privy Council to argue away, on behalf of the Dominion, the right of Ontario as involved in the Award. And he didn't send his Minister of Justice to argue the case, either! Sir John was either indulging in rhetorical rot or rhetorical rascality. When a charlatan, either political or otherwise, begins to be found out, exposures come with startling rapidity.

Editorial Notes.

The redemption of Muskoka by Mr. Dill makes the third Liberal gain in the by-elections for the four weeks ending July 23rd. Lennox will add one more to the number.

It is proposed to give Hon. Mr. Mowat a public reception on his return home from his successful visit to England. His energetic efforts on behalf of Ontario are worthy the warmest public recognition.

Sir Charles Tupper, now that he is safely shelved as High Commissioner, does not mince matters. He says:—"Are the interests of Manitoba and the North-West to be sacrificed to the railway policy of Canada? I say, if it is necessary, YES!"

Mr. J. D. Hawley, ex-M.P.P., is the candidate of the Lennox Liberals for the representation of the riding in the Legislative Assembly. The choice is a good one. Mr. Hawley is a young farmer of great ability. He made an excellent representative during his previous term, and his experience will fit him for serving, even more acceptably and effectively, the interests of his constituents during his coming term.

The Globe thus summarizes the statement of the great cases during the last few months in which the "great constitutional lawyer," Sir John, has had the misfortune to hold opposite views to the Imperial Privy Council. On these Mr. Mowat, that "Little Tyrant," has fairly and squarely downed the doughty knight. They are:

THE INSURANCE CASE.
THE MERCER CASE.
THE STREAMS CASE.
THE LICENCE CASE. and last and greatest,
THE BOUNDARY CASE.

The Conservatives are greatly chagrined that the result in West Ontario has shaken their faith in the lead they took out of the devil's book—trying to promote their own cause by stirring up dissension among their opponents. Mr. J. D. Edgar has been nominated to contest the riding of West Ontario, in the Reform interest, as a candidate for the Commons. To show how egregious was the failure of the Tory hypocrites to brand the integrity of the Reform Ranks in this riding, it only need be stated that on the first ballot Mr. Edgar received seventy out of the seventy-four ballots cast. West Ontario Reformers have formed a ten true estimate of Conservative professions of friendship and chosen substitutes for their welfare, to be duped by them.

In reference to the triumphant settlement of the boundary matter, secured by Hon. Mr. Mowat, the Review impudently and falsely asserts that "the victory in Ontario's, won by Conservatives"—"those to whom Ontario owes the enforcement of its rights are the Conservatives." In reply to this bombast, mark what Sir John, the father of the Conservatives, the only friend of Ontario in this matter, has to say. On May 20th, 1882, Sir John declared:

"DOWN WHERE had been left at [illegible] Winch
It was rather called, to be it was better than anything.

This looks like it. If [illegible] is from each public sentiment expressed in favor of Ontario's rights, that the Review draws the conclusion that the settlement of the boundary business is due to the Tories.

The Mail seems to be only anxious for results; it has no scruples as to the means adopted to reach them. If nothing else will serve, downright manufactured falsehood is employed. In its anxiety to discredit Hon. Mr. Mowat in the boundary case, it has no hesitation in stating a square falsehood. In its issue of Monday the Mail says:—

"We have already made it clear, so clear that no one has dared to deny it, that Sir JOHN MACDONALD tried in 1878 to get Mr. MOWAT to appeal the Award, and refused to the Privy Council. Mr. MOWAT refused."

A word will sweep away the "refuge of lies" the Mail adopts to deceive the people. Sir John made the proposition the Mail refers to on May, 21st., 1872. At that time Mr. Mowat was not Premier of Ontario, he was not a member of the Legislative Assembly. If the Mail will thus falsify facts to gain one end, what trust can be reposed in its general statements?

Mr. Lyon, M.P.P., for Algoma, acting on the advice of counsel, has placed his resignation in the Speaker's hands. He was led to this course by the fact that on account of impossible weather, no polls were held at three polling places in the riding at the last election. The Election Act requires that the task of proving that the failure to hold these polls would not have affected the result of the election, devolves upon the respondent to the election petition. This would have been almost an impossibility, besides being an exceedingly expensive and tedious attempt. Rather than enter upon such a task as the Contested Election Act made obligatory, he pluckily resigned his seat, confident that he would again be elected, which he no doubt will be when he again presents himself before his former constituents. Mr. Lyon's is not the first case of a legal character, which, though just on equitable grounds, has been lost on a mere legal technicality. There is a possibility that Mr. Lyon will, when the election takes place, be returned by acclamation; at least, the prospect is that Mr. Plummer will not be a candidate. He is not enchanted with his past experience in bearing the banner of a lost cause under Tory auspices.

LAKEFIELD.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

SCHOOL BOARD.

A special meeting of the Board was held in the Council Chamber on Tuesday, 15th inst. Present,—Mr. W. C. Sanders, Chairman, Mr. Casement, Dr. Armour, Dr. Caldwell and Mr. Dench.

The principal business consisted in making an estimate of expenses for the present year. A resolution was passed requesting the Council to raise $1,375 for the current expenditure.

A communication was received from the Board of Health, complaining of the school premises, and the Managing Committee were instructed to see after the matter.

The Board adjourned to next regular meeting in September.

REGATTA.

On Tuesday, 22nd inst., Lakefield held a regatta which proved a success, though we think it was hardly advertised as well as it might have been, the time being rather short. The illumination of the canoes in the evening, the great bonfires on the shores along the lake, and the fire works were a grand success, the Peterborough City Band adding to the pleasure of the day and evening. There were a good number of spectators, quite a number arriving by the evening special train from Peterborough.

The regatta was opened at 3 o'clock by a canoe sailing race. Twelve canoes contested, and, we regret to say, there was considerable dissatisfaction as to the arrangement for starting. Some were so handicapped that it was impossible for them to win in a mile race. For example, Mr. Geo. Strickland started three minutes and and forty-two seconds after Dr. Douglas, who won the race. Some more equitable mode of starting the canoes no doubt will be adopted at any future regatta, which we hope we may have annually on our beautiful waters.

The following were the winners for the sailing race:—1st, Dr. Douglas; 2nd, Mr. G. Chopin; 3rd, Mr. Jas. Graham.

The second was a single paddle race, and well contested; Tobaco, of Chemong, winning the first prize, and Mr. Weller, of Peterborough, the second.

The four-paddle race was quite an exciting and close one, three contesting canoes keeping well abreast to the turning buoy, when G. Nichols and his crew of Indians gained a slight advantage, and were closely pressed by Cochrane and crew, while Fuller brought up a good third.

The double scull skiff race was made especially interesting by the presence of lady oarswaines:—1st, Mr. E. Greives and Dr. Douglas—Miss Fanny Strickland, oarswaine; 2nd, Mr. Walter Strickland and Mr. P. Arbuthnot—Miss Emma Strickland, oarswaine.

The following completes the list of races:

DOUBLE PADDLE RACE.—1st, Tobaco and Taylor, both of Chemong; 2nd, G. Nichols and Yellowhead, of Chemong.

HURRY SCURRY RACE.—1st, Tobaco; 2nd, Weller.

BOYS' DOUBLE CANOE RACE—under 11 years.—1st, A. Bell and Geo. Baledon; 2nd, D'Arcy Strickland and Gordon Strickland.

DUCK RACE.—1st, Mr. Weller.

UPSET RACE.—Mr. Weller.

In the evening the canoeists, with their crafts brilliantly illuminated, formed in line and paddled round the river, making a most beautiful spectacle, which was much enhanced by the fire works.

First prize for best illuminated canoe, Mr. Charles Cochrane.

The national anthem brought a most enjoyable and successful day of amusements to a close.

FIRE PROTECTION.

A public meeting was held in the Council Chamber on Friday evening, the 24th inst., to receive the report of the committee who were appointed to get information.

Mr. E. Graham was appointed to the chair, and Dr. Bell, secretary.

The report, as read by the chairman of the committee, was briefly:

That steam fire engines would be too expensive, both as to original cost and annual expenses. That hand fire engines were unsatisfactory. That so far as they had been enabled to ascertain information, $5,000 expended in water works would protect the principal part of the village; but, if more time were granted, they would obtain a more definite estimate of the cost. They recommended in the meantime that the hand engine now owned by the village be kept in order.

An extension of time was granted to the committee to complete their report. Some questions were asked and explanations given, when the meeting adjourned.

HAZEL BRAE HOME.

Reception and Bazar.

Last Wednesday evening a most successful reception and bazar took place at the Peterborough Branch of Dr. Barnardo's Homes, Hazel Brae. Early in the evening the public in large numbers began to throng the beautiful grounds of the Home. The drive approaching the building was illuminated with Chinese lanterns along its sides.

Curiosity to see the little orphaned emigrants perhaps prompted the large number of visitors. The public so overflowed the building that there was little chance to get the youngsters to advantage. They were ranged on the stairs, and sang, during the evening, several selections of music in a very creditable manner. Their cleanliness of aspect and their modest deportment attracted considerable attention and aroused much favorable remark. The bazar was held in the play room, and a vast variety of useful and fancy articles were, by the energy of the ladies responsible for the evening's entertainment, exposed for and met with sale at fair prices, adding considerably to the funds in the treasury. The total amount of receipts, including entrance fees and the proceeds of the bazar, was about $185. While the charitable and self-sacrificing ladies who exerted themselves to such good purpose to make the reception and bazar what it was, a complete success, are entitled to the greatest praise, it might be again mentioned, that to the Christian liberality and thoughtfulness of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. A. Cox they are indebted for an opportunity of exercising their beneficience in favor of a noble work of charity, tending to place in comfortable situations in Christian homes hundreds of orphans that otherwise might have perished in the civilized heathenism of the dark districts of London.

PERSONAL.

Our thanks are due to Mr. Robert Innes, of Messrs. Hall, Innes & Co., now in Europe, for copies of old country newspapers.

Mr. Archie Macdonald, who has been severely ill with scarlet fever, has recovered his wonted robust health and joviality.

Messrs. G. Strickland and J. E. McIntyre, came in fifth and sixth, in the single scull event of the Amateur Oarsmen's Regatta, at Toronto, on Tuesday.

Dr. Barnardo, the well-known founder of that noble and multiplex system of perfectly organised charity, the Barnardo Homes, was in town on Monday.

Rev. Mr. Hare, M. A., principal in the Ontario Ladies College, Whitby, occupied the pulpit of the Ashburnham Methodist church on Sunday last.

The Calgary Herald says that Mr. W. J. Cavanaugh, accompanied by his sister-in-law, Mrs. W. J. Green, Peterborough, were among the tourists to the Rocky Mountains last week.

Captain Bridgewater, of Anstruther, was in town on Wednesday and favored us with a call. The genial Captain reports the crops as generally an average. He also says that the journey of sixty miles, that used to take him three days, was done this time in one, thanks to the energetic exertions of Mr. Thos. Blezard, M.P.P., and the liberality of the Ontario Government towards Colonization roads.

THE EFFECTS OF THE N. P.

The fact that the Dundas Cotton Mill was running more than full time prior to 1878, and that its operatives were paid higher wages than they have ever received since that time, is indisputable, as also the fact that the same story may be told of all the other mills then in existence. But now silence reigns supreme in this once busy hive of industry, and every day comes intelligence that other establishments of this kind are in more trouble. Park & Son, of the St. John Cotton Mill, are now in difficulty, and their immense establishment is closed. They were overrun with orders prior to 1878, but now they have been driven to the wall, and the only hope now held out for Canada Cotton Mills is that if they all shut down the surplus stock now on the market may in time be consumed, as it has been announced that the attempt to send a portion of the surplus stock to Britain has been found to be impracticable. And the cotton business is not the only one that is suffering from over-production caused by the pernicious effects of the N. P. The woolen industry is in just about as bad a state, and is proof of this we may state that the traveller for a shuttle manufacturing establishment in Dundas has just returned from a business trip east of Toronto, and reports that out of forty-two woollen mills which he visited thirty-eight were running short time or were closed altogether. But of course it is altogether wrong and unpatriotic to note these facts—at least so say the N. P. babblers. It is nothing that the N. P. promises were that depression would be prevented, and that Sir Leonard only one short year ago declared that under its fostering care "every manufacturer and business man should clap on all sail for seven more years of unexampled prosperity." Now the only hope the country has is in the prospect of a good harvest, and we ought to be thank that this blessing is not dependent upon the N. P. mixers and muddlers.—Dundas Banner.

A New Way to Scare Old Tramps.

Two young gentlemen, who make their living in a profession where assurance is considered a necessary trait, were engaged in conversation. To them came a tramp of the trampiest kind and asked for alms. One of the young gentlemen, who rejoiced in a sunburned nose—the result of riding a bicycle to High Bridge—and a general judicial aspect, turned upon the tramp and said:

"Where have I seen you before? Haven't you been up before me in the Jefferson Market Police Court?"

"No, sor," was the reply. "I niver was up in the Jifferson Market at all, at all."

"Well, go away, and don't bother me, or the next time you come up I'll give you two months."

And he went with much suddenness.

ONTARIO AND QUEBEC RAILWAY.

Passenger and Freight Traffic.

DESCRIPTION OF THE NEW COACHES.

On Friday last Mr. Geo. Stephens, President of the Canadian Pacific Railway Syndicate, General Manager VanHorne, and other officials of the road, passed through Peterborough on their tour of inspection of the line.

They report the road in excellent condition and ready for traffic. The difficulty over the sink-hole at Kaladar has been thoroughly overcome, and the road bed is now as solid as on any other parts of the line. On Monday the entire line will be open for through freight traffic, and trains will be despatched daily.

On Monday, August 4, the running of through passenger trains will be commenced. The Dominion express company will operate the entire line, in fact they are already doing so between Toronto and Montreal

THE COACHES DESCRIBED.

When a new road is being equipped it naturally has the advantage of being able to furnish its patrons with the newest improvements. This is the case with the Ontario & Quebec Railway, and it is but just to say that no expense appears to have been spared to make its equipment in every detail of elegance and comfort.

THE FIRST-CLASS CARS.

All the new cars have been painted the light reddish brown which is now the regulation Canadian Pacific color. All the first-class cars are fitted up with double windows and have an additional luxury in the shape of a lavatory at each end, and are furnished with the Spear heater. A few which have been built at Cobourg are lined overhead with bronze and sea-green metal handsomely embossed, forming a beautiful ceiling to the car and have "scratch-backs" to prevent the brakemen from defacing the car when lighting up. The seats are upholstered in red plush, and are made as comfortable as possible, while the backs are locked so that the seats cannot be reversed without the consent of the train officials. All the inner woodwork of both first and second class cars is of polished hardwood. The second class cars are finished in a similar manner to the emigrant sleeping cars now in use, the seats being of alternate strips of ash and cherry.

THE PARLOR CARS.

Four parlor cars have been built and are now in use between Montreal and Ottawa. These are the "Lachute," "Lachine," Calumet," "Carillon." These are handsomely and tastefully finished in mahogany and inlaid wood. Tea luxurious revolving chairs run down each side of the cars, and each chair is supplied with a comfortable hassock. At each end of the car is a comfortable smoking-room, fitted with lounges and every convenience for the patrons of the road. Each of these smoking-rooms has ample accommodation for six persons, thus allowing twelve occupants of the chairs an opportunity to enjoy the "fragrant weed." Double windows are provided in order that during the cold blasts of winter an equable temperature may be maintained with the aid of the hot water supplied to the pipes by the Baker heaters at each end. The whole internal fittings, including lamps and brackets, are of the best and most elegant description, and the inlaid work is especially tasty and handsome in design and finish.

THE SLEEPING CARS.

Five of the new sleeping cars which will run between Toronto and Montreal have already been delivered and will be be put into service on the opening of the through line. Their names are the Chaudiere, Quebec, St. Lawrence, Peterborough and Gaudeau. Two others the Montreal and Toronto, will be delivered shortly. They are placed on trucks of the latest and most improved pattern, furnished with disc wheels, so as to raise as little dust as possible. The cars are divided into thirteen sections, each consisting of a double upper and double lower berth. The upper berths are finished in carved mahogany and when made up are firmly held in position by a strong wire rope attached to the lower berth. In some of the cars the seats are upholstered with olive green and in others with red plush. The floor is covered with a handsome English Wilton carpet, while the curtains and hangings are of tapestry of excellent quality and of tasty design. The blankets and linen are of the best quality to be obtained and have the words "Canadian Pacific Railway" woven in. Feather pillows and comfortable spring mattresses complete the furnishing of the berths. Like the other cars they have double windows, the sashes are also provided, so that the windows can be open both day and night without any of that disagreeable draught to which occupants of the berths nearest the doors are subjected in cars where only the upper sash can be opened. Lights is furnished at night from five large chandeliers, each holding two lamps with large burners. At one end of the car is a smoking room, which is closed up in a separate compartment to those in the parlor cars but which can be converted into a saloon when necessary. Every fixture in the car is hammered gold, which will neither rust nor discolor through salt. This includes the water pumps and taps in the lavatories, and the arms of the seats. Baker heaters at each end supply the pipes running down each side of the cars with hot water in such a manner that the temperature of the car can be properly adjusted. The interior woodwork is of all of polished mahogany except the headlining, which is of light maple, beautifully decalcomanied. In each of the cars French plate-glass mirrors are placed between each pair of windows, and four polished mahogany tables are furnished for the use of passengers. The sleepers were all built and equipped by Barney & Smith, of Dayton, Ohio, and are among the most perfect specimens of the carbuilders' art

Tired Women.

If you look around on the faces in a street car, the number of faded and dull-looking countenances presenting themselves is startling. Mature women have especially a tired air about them, showing itself not only in pallid complexions, but in the wearied lines around the mouth and eyes. It is impossible to associate this appearance with happy lives, and yet from dress and manner, the majority would seem to be comfortably placed in this world. Usually the climate is supposed to have a great deal to do with the early fading of youthful freshness, and the beauty of health, instead of reviving with the spring of the year, usually delays until the summer holidays, followed by the crisp autumn breezes, invigorate the human system. If the truth was known, however, I suspect that it would be found that the reason why women look tired is because they are perpetually fatigued.

Modern methods have not eased the cares of wives and mothers, whose duties have developed with the growth of science and the expansion of art. When the children were thrashed into obedience to parental commands, when young people understood that to hear was to obey, when husbands only expected their regular three meals a day and mended and clean clothing, the duties of women were very much simpler than at the present time. In those happy days, when to eat, sleep and work was the whole duty of man, and the interests of posterity a side issue, the mistress of the household might, after her work was done, eat and sleep, too. At least she had a chance to work when husband and children were engaged in business or in school for long hours of the day. In those days, rain or sunshine were the same, life moved in a groove, and there was a probability of things running smoothly. In those days people ate what was set before them, because there was not much variety to be had, and they were not always developing new ideas in the way of occupations and diversions that upset the regular routine of a household. Perhaps it was monotonous, but it was restful for the housekeepers.

In the great upheaval of mind which has of late years set each individual soul on the search for that good living which the world is supposed to owe it, whether the quest is continued in the direction of business, pleasure, science, art or religion, it is the wife and mother who is expected to be the instrument of Providence in providing the means and forwarding the success of the seekers, and nobody thinks of all the extra burden this throws upon her—the strain of her sympathy, the tax on her bodily strength. From the child who wants a play made for him to the husband who wants to talk over his affairs with her, it is one long intermediate chain of little services which are expected from her. That she has personal tastes or inclinations is never taken into account. She has no time left for her own use, but is actually at the beck and call of all belonging to her from early morning until late at night.

It is a curious fact in connection with the nineteenth century, that few people are self-reliant, and still fewer can occupy themselves agreeably without aid. Like the Turk, they want somebody to amuse them. With the additional burden of having that the members of a family are amused, as well as their wants provided for, it is no wonder that wives and mothers look tired. No doubt men feel the fatigue of the constant drive that is requisite to keep up with the general stride, but they have a peculiar faculty of being able to take a rest, even in the midst of turmoil. Women, unfortunately, from long experience in being overdriven, get into that state where they cannot repose, even when the opportunity offers. This is a state of nervous expectation, brought about by the knowledge that there will be something to do in a minute, even if there is nothing calling for attention just now.

A Scrupulous Letter-Writer.

Rogers was fastidious to a fault, and wrote with great difficulty—correcting and recorrecting with painful elaboration whatever he wrote, either in prose or in verse—sometimes spending a week or more in the composition of a single sentence. He once showed me a note which he had written to Lord Melbourne, at that time prime minister, suggesting that he should grant a pension on the civil list to the Rev. Mr. Carey, the translator of Dante. The note consisted but of a dozen lines—perhaps even less—but he assured me that it had occupied his time and care for a full fortnight, and that he hoped that he had succeeded in rendering it so compact, and so forcible, as well as so elegant, as to defy ingenuity to omit a word from, or add a word to it, or even to change a single word or phrase for a better one. He read it over to me as an example of what I and everyone else ought to aim at in epistolary, or indeed in all literary composition. I remember the concluding paragraph of this painfully produced epistle, which was: "But perhaps your lordship has already granted the pension? If so—I envy you!"—Belgravia.

The Queen of Otaheite modestly remarked to a New Yorker: "I am very ignorant, and I am conscious that I am not a wit. Though I know French and English, and play several musical instruments, I was not a bright girl at school, and have not improved much since. What, then, can it matter to the world what I think of Paris, Havre, New York or San Francisco? More intelligent and observant persons than I can set up to be pass daily through these cities. Why do not the reporters pounce on them and question them? I should feel so happy in hastening back to Otaheite if I were not afraid of being dogged by American interviewers."

A lady, the wife of a hotel-keeper in Marysville, Cal., gives this life-sketch: "There came down from the mountains, one day, the most comical-looking old couple I ever beheld. They were English, and had lived in California two years, both working in the mines. The woman had on a thin, faded calico gown, which had come with her from England ten years before, a calico basket over her shoulders, and on her head was an apology for a sunbonnet. Her husband wore a Mackintosh, which reached to his heels, and on his head an old hat—and oh, what a hat! Altogether they were the most forlorn-looking couple one would wish to see. They carried penury in their very countenances. I pitied the old woman, so I gave her a gentleman's dressing-gown which had been left at the hotel. It was rather soiled, to be sure; but it was better than anything that she had. They had started home to England by the way of New York.

"When the barkeeper requested the man to sign his name, he made a cross; and she was as ignorant as he. At night she asked me if I would give her a room with good fastenings to the doors and windows, as they had a good deal of gold-dust with them. I inquired to know where it was, as they brought no baggage with them, except a little bag, which she carried on her arm. She said it was in belts round their waists. I told her if it were much, she had better deliver it up to the proprietor of the house for safe-keeping. Said she, "Oh, no, I wouldn't lose sight of it for anything! I have five thousand dollars in my belt, and my husband has the same. I advised her to send it by express to New York, as they might be robbed on the way. She said they could not afford to pay the percentage for its transportation, when they could carry it, and save that money. So they started to take passage for New York by the way of Nicaragua.

"The next news I heard of them was that they were both drowned at Virgin Bay while going from the shore in a boat to get on board the steamer. The weight of their gold belts sank them at once, while the rest of the capsized boat's passengers floated and were picked up by other boats. Thus these two old people, who had lived in poverty all their days, died rich, clutching the treasure for which they had toiled so hard."

Dear Sirs,—The Ower's Root Bitters are selling finely here. I have myself used them with excellent effect, as of course did my family which is large. Yours truly,

It Has Made a New Man of Me.

I am the most agreeably surprised man in this section of the country. I don't think any one could feel more supremely thankful than I do when I commenced to use Ower's Root Bitters. It has done a new man of me. It is the best dollar I ever spent. I could not eat or sleep, and felt miserably dejected. After taking Crowfoot I could eat, sleep, had a splendid appetite and felt first-rate. I believe it to be the best medicine of the period for Dyspepsia and Indigestion.

Faithful to Death;

OR, THE FARMER'S DAUGHTER.

"O old fellow, why any one died in that [illegible] her feet. Lawrence and he, [illegible] Mrs. Vaughan, [illegible] Hilborough his head on the [illegible] [illegible] he [illegible]—

"Will you [illegible] me all about it, for I cannot even yet understand?"

She told him all that had happened on the night he left the farm, but he was still puzzled, he had not the key; he did not know what Lady Gerton had told her.

He wept most bitter tears when Mrs. Vaughan told him how delighted she was with the locket and the letters.

"She grew better sir, from that hour she said but little to me. 'Mother,' she whispered, 'he is coming back'—and I guessed all from those few words—'he is coming back.'

"From the hour that locket came until the hour she died it was never out of her hands. She asked me to place a couch for her in the sitting-room. She lay there day after day, week after week, her eyes fixed on the white road, watching for you, sir, and you never came. Then she grew better, always hoping and waiting for you, until this paper came. She asked Laurence to get her something to read, and he brought her this. She died a few hours afterwards. We knew she could not live if the same thing happened over again. People laugh, sir at the notion of broken hearts, but Bonnie Doon's heart was broken for you."

CHAPTER XVIII.

The day of Bonnie Doon's funeral was one never forgotten in the country side. Her secret was well kept; no one knew why she died. It was rumored that the gentleman, who had lived during the summer at Larch Hill, had returned to ask her to marry him, and had almost died of grief himself to find her dead.

How much was true and how much false, no one knew. Bonnie Doon, the loveliest girl in the neighborhood, the [illegible] of [illegible] was [illegible] sympathy [illegible] felt for [illegible] parents. [illegible] lamented for [illegible] wide. [illegible] will ever [illegible] funeral; [illegible] simple [illegible] beautiful. [illegible] old-fashioned people in Aspendale. There were no hearses, no nodding plumes. The girls, who had known and loved her, carried her to the grave; and the ceremony was more like a marriage, even though the bridegroom was Death, than like a funeral. The funeral pall was of white, and was covered with white flowers; the girls who carried her were dressed in white; the sun shone and the birds sang as they carried her along the white high road she should tread no more. The man who loved her so dearly, but had tarried so long, was first in the funeral procession, and those who saw him by her grave knew how he had loved her. That evening, when the funeral was over and the farmer with his wife, who seemed suddenly to have grown old and helpless, sat on either side of their desolate hearth, he joined them, and to them, in full and perfect detail, he told the story of his love and his delay.

They did not judge him hardly; they could not, for his grief was as the deep sea; and they knew that, although in the after years fame and wealth might come to him, he would never know what happiness meant without Bonnie Doon.

The people at Aspendale take all strangers to see the beautiful white marble monument that her lover raised to Bonnie Doon—a cross on which her name and age are carved in letters of gold. When Eric St. John was first asked what inscription he would like placed there, he felt inclined to answer,—

"My fause lover stole the rose,
But ah! he left the thorn wi' me."

But then he had not been false, and he contented himself with some beautiful lines gathered from the Psalms.

He would have no flowers but roses round her grave,—roses and thorns that grew together, and no one but he knew the meaning of those flowers. How often in the after time as he lingered near the grave, listening to the song of the birds in the trees, he remembered the same sweet words of her song,—

"How can you chaunt, ye little birds,
While I sit so weary—fu' o' care!"

And he said to himself, as she had said before him, how could they sing, those bonnie birds, while his heart was breaking with care and woe?

But before this, the calm of after years, a terrible incident had happened—on the day after the funeral.

Mr. St. John and gone into the field, a pretty meadow they called the "Home Field," and there he lay, September though it was, under the shade of the trees. He was trying to think how he should face life again; how he should go from this peaceful solitude, where his beloved dead rested, back to the busy world. How could he meet men and women again?

His face lay in the long grass hidden from the blue sky, and it was wet with [illegible] of grass. Once or twice he had [illegible] that footsteps passed near him. Suddenly something that was as fierce as the growl of a wild animal startled him. Looking up, he saw bending over him a face so wild in its hate and enmity, it seemed hardly human.

Then he knew it was Laurence Rainton, holding in his hand a huge hedge stake.

"I have found you," he cried in a thick hoarse, voice. "I have found you and by Heaven you shall die. I would have killed you on the day of her funeral but for her sweet sake."

Before he had time to raise himself, to spring from the ground, or to seize his assailant, a heavy blow had fallen on his head and partially stunned him, yet not so far but that he could hear and understand.

"You will never get up from the green grass again," continued the fierce voice. "Do you know what you have done? You have broken the sweetest heart that ever beat in a human breast, broken it, and your wretched life shall pay the penalty. You gave her no time to pray for mercy, I give you none; when this blow falls you will be a dead man."

He made a feeble effort to move, he tried to clutch the green grass, he tried to cry out; it had been a terrific blow; there was nothing but darkness before him.

"I swore," went on the angry voice, "that if any man ever hurt one hair of her dear head I would slay him—you have broken her heart. What death do you deserve to die? I have lived near her all my life, I have loved her all my life, just as though she had been a queen, and I her slave, loved her with the very fibres of my heart. I waited until she grew old enough to ask her to be my wife, and while I waited you stole her. You stole her, and killed her. I wish that I could torture you to death. If you had loved her and made her happy I should not have cared for my grief. I would have given my miserable life twice over to have seen her happy. You have killed her, and you shall die.

"I have watched it. When you came here first she was as blythe and bright as a child; she was happy as one of those singing birds, and you, a fine gentleman, one of the thrice-accursed aristocrats, who reckon a girl's heart as a plaything, you had nothing to do just then but win her love—you had nothing to amuse yourself with. You wanted something to pass away your time, so you slowly murdered a girl! I know now that she is dead and cannot speak, cannot denounce you, you have come, like a hypocrite, to mourn at her funeral. You may deceive others, but you cannot deceive me. When I saw you follow her to the grave, I said to myself, 'He comes to [illegible] [illegible] his [illegible] [illegible] to [illegible] [illegible] day [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] how [illegible] [illegible] that [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

SANDERSON'S

FOR FINEST JEWELRY, WATCHES, CLOCKS, PLATED WARE AND MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

HUDSON BAY EXPEDITION.

THE PARTY TO BE SPREAD OVER SEVEN STATIONS—PROSPECTS OF A VERY DREARY WINTER.

Lieut. A. R. Gordon, R. N., Superintendent of the Canadian meteorological service, has been in Halifax for some time, making final preparations for embarking with a corps of observers for Hudson's straits. The ship which is selected for the expedition, and which sailed last evening, is the Mary Jane, a staunch steamer and sailing vessel of 395 tons gross. The crew with explorers will number 55 men.

The work of establishing stations in the straits, which are 400 miles long by 100 to 200 miles broad, is not unattended with risks, as much of the outline even of the coasts is unknown. There are no exact charts or soundings. Cape Hopes is the most important station, and here, in addition to other observations, a meteorological station will be opened. Mr. Stibbert, who has been at Toronto observatory for several years, will be in charge of observations here. Other Toronto people on board are W. Fox, artist, and Wm. Skynner and Wm. Ramsford.

The expedition is in accordance with a vote of parliament of $70,000 to obtain suitable information as to the navigation of the straits and to decide the feasibility of the adoption of this route as a summer outlet for the produce of the North-west. The men are engaged at the rate of $35 a month, with a bounty of $20 and found and shipped for two or three years. Each man will be supplied with a fowling piece and rifle. Sufficient ammunition for fifteen months will be left at each station, it being thought that considerable game can be got to assist the stores. No liquor is allowed to be taken by the men. Each station party will consist of two men and an Esquimaux interpreter, besides the officers in charge. Their winter life on these desolate shores promises to be a lonely one, but no doubt will have its compensation. It is expected the first station will be reached early in August and after landing the party for the furthest station, which is 2,500, miles from Halifax, the Neptune will return with Lieut. Gordon, the parties will remain at the stations until next year, when perhaps another steamer will be fitted out to release them or otherwise as the government may determine.

CURIOUS FIGURES.

There are thirty-eight States in the Union. The combined names of James Gillespie Blaine and John Alexander Logan have thirty-eight letters. Hence, also, a further curious fact: The name of Blaine contains six letters; he was nominated on the sixth day of the sixth month of the year, the day being spelled with six letters. He will receive the six electoral votes of his State and, when elected, will be the sixth President with the name of James. He was nominated in the fourth largest city in the country on the fourth ballot, he will be elected of the 4th of November, and inaugurated on the 4th of March. —St. Louis Morning Call.

Having persisted in its use for several weeks I recovered perfect health. It energizes and sustains the vital forces in a remarkable manner.

PRIDE AND VANITY.

No two qualities in the human mind are more essentially different, though often confounded, than pride and vanity. The proud man entertains the highest opinion of himself; the vain man only strives to infuse such an opinion into the minds of others. The proud man thinks, admiration is due; the vain man is satisfied if he can obtain it. Pride, by stateliness demands respect; vanity, by little artifices, solicits applause. Pride, therefore makes men disagreeable, and vanity ridiculous.

The following remedy will prove effectual for cabbage worms. Take green smart weed or pepper weed, so well known to farmers; dry it thoroughly, so that it can be reduced to powder. Possibly, if the smart weed was boiled in water, and then sprinkled on the plants, it would serve the same purpose.

Intoxication!

Is the weak man's inspiration and the highest point ever reached by a numerous class in the community. Without the ability or perseverance to work from an independent basis, they cling like barnacles to ideas emanating from others and with perverse blindness believe them to be their own. Now, that explains why that widely known and much appreciated remedy—PUTNAM'S PAIN-LESS Corn Extractor, has a dozen or more imitators not having sufficient martius themselves unprincipled dealers, for a larger profit palm them off on unsuspecting and confiding customers as "just as good" &c. Robert hesitated, but finally blurted out: "I thought it was Annie Warren, but when we got to the turn of the road she went into Ella Ham's house."

"But I should think you might have told by the sound of her voice," said his father.

"Neither of us said a word," said Bob, blushing and stammering.

And because the lecturer wouldn't explain, the solemn party sailed majestically out of the hall, thumping his cane angrily all the way.

Higher Prices for Butter.

All dairymen who use Wells, Richardson & Co's Improved Butter Color, agree that it increases the value of butter several cents a pound. It is pure and harmless, convenient for instant use, imparts a rich color, and gives a clean, golden richness to the butter. It is the very best butter color obtainable, and is not expensive. In every state in the Union the demand for it is increasing.

THE HAPPIEST MAN.

A gentleman who had experienced no little discomfort from the whims of a supercilious wife was asked the question: "Who do you think is the happiest man that ever lived?"

"Adam, he answered, promptly.

"And why Adam?"

"Because he never had an opportunity to make love to a mother-in-law."

"I should think she would have a lovely face in repose," was the reply, "but I don't know as any one ever say it so."

"I have," said the first young man.

"When?"

"One evening when I took her to church."

The congregation of the Baptist Church have decided to accept the offer of the trustees of the Murray-street Methodist Church (late Bible Christian), and have, subject to the approval of an architect or builder, purchased the church property, including the parsonage, for $7,000. A Good Organ Well Sold.

Capt. Bridgewater, of Apsley, showed excellent judgment, and a determination to buy the best organ in the market, when, on Monday, he purchased from Mr. J. J. Irwin, agent, opposite the market buildings, a splendidly finished and first-class Dominion Organ. These superior instruments have such a well-deserved reputation that they almost sell themselves, whatever persuasion additionally necessary, being well supplied by the efficient agent, Mr. Irwin.

A Splendid Chance.

It will be seen by an advertisement in another column that Mr. D. W Dumble offers for sale a number of Building Lots in various parts of the town on ten years credit. No money down, interest only to be paid for first five years, and thereafter yearly instalments with the right to pay at any time as may suit the convenience of the purchaser. This offer enables a poor man to use his money in erecting a building, and so he gets rid of rent, and secures a home for himself. Building will be cheap this year and no doubt many will take advantage of this very liberal offer. Besides lots in town, Mr. Dumble offers a number of lots in Ashburnham, and several park lots on the same terms. Call at his office and see plans, &c.

True Blue Demonstration.

The True Blues of Peterborough are determined to make a monster demonstration on the Civic Holiday, Aug. 12th, when they will celebrate the 196th. anniversary of the opening of the gates of Derry. All arrangements have been made for the presence, not only of the True Blues and Orangemen of this county, but also of members of the order in strong force from the counties of Victoria, Durham, and Northumberland. Invitations, which will no doubt be accepted, have been sent to the Orangeman and True Blues of Toronto, Hamilton and Brantford, to be present on the great occasion. The railway fares have been so arranged as to give cheap rates for that day. Tickets will be issued over the Grand Trunk Railway, good for two days, at single fare. The most careful and complete arrangements have been made for the comfort and entertainment of visitors during the day, For further particulars, the reader will please consult large posters.

Drowning Accident.

A deplorable drowning accident occurred at Nassau Mills on Friday last. Mr. F. Twigg, who was in Mr. Irwin's employ at the Nassau Mills, was assisting in the repairs that are being made to the dam While passing from one part of the work to the other he slipped and fell into the water, and was at once swept down stream by the current. Having been, however, a good swimmer, he succeeded in recovering himself, and coming to a standing position on the river bottom in shallow water. A boat at once pushed out to rescue him, but suddenly he was swept off his feet by something under the water, and probably stunned at the same time, for he at once disappeared and his body has not yet been recovered. The deceased was the son of an English Church clergyman, of Ireland, and has only been a short time out from the Old Country. All efforts to recover the body proving ineffectual, Mr. Irwin, who highly respected the young man, with whose father he was acquainted, has offered a reward of $40 to any person discovering the body of the young man. Since the above was in type, the body was recovered (on Tuesday) above Hilliard's dam. The body was taken in charge by Mr. D. Bellegheim, undertaker, who conducted the funeral from the residence of Mr. Hamilton, foreman of the mills. The employes of the mills followed the remains to the Little Lake Cemetery, when they were interred with every mark of respect.

Musical Entertainment.

The musical entertainment in aid of the building fund of St. Peter's Cathedral, held under the auspices and management of the the ladies of the Third Ward, in the Murray street school, on Tuesday evening last, was a delightful success. There was an attendance of about 250—as many as the school room could comfortably accommodate. Previous to the concert, which began at a quarter to nine, the visitors promenaded in the grounds, listening to a fine selection of airs, played by the City Band. The concert consisted of the following programme, excellently carried out:—Overture, City Band Orchestra; opening chorus, "Millard's Gloria," choir; solo, "Spanish Cavalier," Miss Minnie Dunn; instrumental solo, piano, Professor Doucet, Quebec; Duet, "The Fisherman," Misses Delaney; Duet, "The Pale Moon," Misses Bagley and Delaney; selection, orchestra; song, "Ehern on the Rhine," Miss L. Bagley; piano solo, Miss Annie Delaney; violin solo, Professor Doucet; song, "Alice, Where Art Thou?" Miss L. Bagley; song, "Sing, Sweet Bird," Miss A. Delaney; trio, Misses Dunn, McIlmoyle and Simons; chorus, "Moonlight on the Lake," choir; and "God Save the Queen." Previous to the concert, and during the evening, refreshments were served abundantly. The ladies of the Third Ward are to be congratulated on the great success of the concert, a good share of the credit being due, however, to the committee, Messrs. James Sheehy, secretary, P. Corkery, W. Delaney, M. McFadden, P. Henry, F. P. Hurley and J. Coughlin. The net proceeds amounted to about $90.

Our New Watchmaker, Mr. Hughan, comes well recommended, and we are sure any work entrusted to him will be done in good style. Office lately occupied by Elias Barnham, Simcoe Steet. 18-tf

The annual picnic of the employes of the Midland Division of the Grand Trunk, will be held this year, August, 20th., at the Bonnie.

Camping Furniture.

M. McFadden has now received a large stock of furniture direct from New York, for use of those going camping, embracing beds, chairs, stools &c. See advertisement in another column.

Bridgenorth.

On Friday a recently made grave containing the body of a child was found outside the burial ground, Bridgenorth. The body was properly interred inside the burial enclosure.

Dominion Express Company.

We learn that the Dominion Express Company has filed its bonds with the Dominion Government to carry goods in bond. From this date the public may look for the advantages naturally arising from the competition of two express companies.

Baseball Match.

On Tuesday, an interesting baseball match between the Lindsay club and the Silver Stars of this town, was witnessed by a large number. The Lindsay nine was successful by a score of 12 to 6. The home team excelled on the field and the visitors at the bat.

A New Journal.

Mr. W. H. Robertson, of the Times, has issued the first number of a very creditable farm journal, the Canadian Agriculturist. Throughout, it bears the marks of the characteristic enterprise of the publisher, and if it is kept up to the standard of the initial number, it will be sure to win its way among the farmers. Only $1 per year.

Brought Home for Burial.

On Tuesday the body of Mrs. Daly, wife of Timothy Daly, formerly of Hastings, was brought to Peterborough from Hemlock, Michigan, where the death occurred. The funeral, conducted by Mr. M. McFadden, took place from the residence of the mother-in-law of deceased, Mrs. T. Daly, Reid street.

Undertaking.

Mr. Clegg has just received his stock of coffins, caskets, shrouds, and everything in that line. We noticed on Wednesday, fifteen cases of this class of goods in front of his store, which has been refitted to receive these goods in the style adopted by the best undertakers in the cities. His splendid new hearse, which is second to none in the Dominion, will be ready this week.

Collegiate Institute.

The committee on appointments of the Peterborough Board of Education, met on Tuesday evening, and with the new principal, Dr. Tassie, entered upon the consideration of the forty applications received to fill the vacancies in the staff. The examination of testimonials was partially completed. The committee adjourned till Wednesday night, when no doubt the principal and the committee will decide upon the appointment of masters to fill the vacancies.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

We are requested to announce that a party of 35 boys from Dr. Barnardo's Homes in England, eligible for situations on farms or in business houses, is expected to leave Liverpool on or about the 31st inst, and may be looked for on or about the middle of August. Any one desirous of securing one of these lads, whether for the purpose of adoption, or merely for services; and who is prepared to offer a careful religious training as well as a comfortable, home, is invited to apply, personally or by letter, to Mr. Edward Duff, Superintendent, Dr. Barnardo's Home, Peterborough.

Illuminated Canoe Parade.

There was an immense number of citizens congregated on Burnham's point on Monday evening to witness the illuminated canoe parade. but, unfortunately, there were only eight or ten canoes on parade. So many members of the boating club are out of town, camping, or otherwise holidaying, that it was impossible to get the usual number together. However, those that were on hand, went through the programme of manœuvres in excellent style. The lack of illumination from canoes was brilliantly made up by a big bonfire on point St. Charles, which threw a weird Salvator Rosa glow over the scene.

Improvement.

Mr. George Rubidge's tobacco store, George st., has been wonderfully brightened and improved. Internally the wood work has been treated with fresh paint and varnish. The walls and ceiling have been renewed with an elegant pattern of paper, the latter with tasty and appropriate bordering, hung by Mr. T. McGrath. The enterprising proprietor, newthat he has become a direct importer of tobaccos and cigars, is bound to maintain his establishment in keeping with the dignity of the new departure. We have not learned the truth of the rumor that the recent improvement to the apartments of the Indian Queen, point to the probability of her being supplanted by an inamorata of more sympathetic flesh and blood.

A Good Man Promoted.

The many friends of Mr. A. T. Smith, the popular and efficient agent of the Bell Telephone Company hear with pleasure that he has been promoted to the management of the Halifax agency, where he will be in charge of an exchange with 225 subscribers, and at a handsome advance in salary. Mr. Smith has been in charge of the agency here two and a half years. When he came there were only 35 subscribers, and the company had not a single pole standing. Since that time the subscribers have doubled, and Mr. Smith has worked up one of the neatest, most complete and handsomest central exchange premises to be found anywhere. Mr. Smith leaves Peterborough to arrive in Halifax about the 13th of August. He will be succeeded by Mr. H. W. Kent, of Lindsay. We congratulate our Haligonian cousins; they will have in Mr. Smith not only a first-class telephone man, but a thoroughly good fellow all 'round.

The Art Exhibition.

The committee who have charge of the arrangements for this Exhibition are meeting with much success in their canvass for pictures, curiosities, and bric-a-brac. As it will be impossible for them to call on all who have articles suitable for such an exhibition, those willing to help by loaning works of art, &c., would greatly oblige the committee by notifying the secretary, Mr. G. E. Williams. The articles already promised would make a good show, but there is still room for more. The committee have had scarcely a single refusal from the citizens on whom they have called. Messrs. Wm. Scott & Son, art dealers of Montreal, are sending up some fine paintings, which will doubtless add greatly to the attractiveness of the exhibition. These pictures will be for sale. The following is a list of them with prices attached:—

Two Hours With Madame Rossiter.

Madame C. C. Rossiter the well known authoress, elocutionist and musician, will, under the auspices of the Fire Brigade Band, give one of her unique and unrivalled entertainments in Bradburn's Opera House, on Friday evening next. This lady, who only recently arrived fresh from professional triumphs in England, has been most enthusiastically received in Canada. Her entertainment on Friday evening will consist of marvellous feats on the pianoforte; a special feature, her wondrous performance on an English concertina, and to vary the musical portion of the programme, comic and tragic dramatic recitations will be introduced. Wherever she has appeared, Madame Rossiter has been received with the greatest enthusiasm. The Brockville Recorder, whose musical criticisms are written by an excellent judge of music, Prof. Kauffman, says of her performance in Brockville:

Madame Rossiter unites everything requisite to constitute a fine artiste, enormous technique, purity in her runs, clearness in phrasing, evenly balanced power in both hands, and elegance and depth in conception, and justly may the lady be called a virtuoso and true artiste, with exceptional faculties.

The public will, by attending this entertainment, be sure of a first class musical and elocutionary treat. The Fire Brigade band is also worthy of the warmest encouragement. The boys are not at all sparing of their fine music, and are at all times ready and willing to contribute to the entertainment of the public, and we hope that the concert given under their auspices, will be liberally patronized. Tickets, twenty five and fifty cents. Two children under fifteen admitted on one ticket. Tickets for sale at Hartley's music store.

AYER'S Cherry Pectoral.

No other compliments are so insidious in their attack as those affecting the throat and lungs: none so trifled with by the majority of sufferers. The ordinary cough or cold, resulting perhaps from a trifling or unconscious exposure, is often but the beginning of a fatal sickness. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL has well proven its efficacy in a forty years' fight with throat and lung diseases, and should be taken in all cases without delay.

A Terrible Cough Cured.

"In 1857 I took a severe cold, which affected my lungs. I had a terrible cough, and passed night after night without sleep. The doctors gave me up. I used AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which relieved my lungs, induced sleep, and afforded me the rest necessary for the recovery of my strength. By the continued use of the PECTORAL a permanent cure was effected. I am now 61 years old, hale and hearty, and am satisfied your CHERRY PECTORAL saved me.

HORACE FAIRBROTHER."

Rockingham, Vt., July 15, 1882.

Croup.—A Mother's Tribute.

"While in the country last winter my little boy, three years old, was taken ill with croup; it seemed as if he would die from strangulation. One of the family suggested the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, a bottle of which was always kept in the house. This was tried in small and frequent doses, and to our delight in less than half an hour the little patient was breathing easily. The doctor said that the CHERRY PECTORAL had saved my darling's life. Can you wonder at our gratitude? Sincerely yours, MRS. EMMA GREENE."

120 West 126th St., New York, May 16, 1882.

"I have used AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL in my family for several years, and do not hesitate to pronounce it the most effectual remedy for coughs and colds we have ever tried. A. J. CRANE."

Lake Crystal, Minn., March 13, 1882.

"I suffered for eight years from Bronchitis, and after trying many remedies with no success, I was cured by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. JOSEPH WALKER."

Byhalia, Miss., April 8, 1882.

"I cannot say enough in praise of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, believing as I do that but for its use I should long since have died from lung troubles. E. ERLEDGE."

Palestine, Texas, April 22, 1882.

No case of an affection of the throat or lungs exists which cannot be greatly relieved by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and it will always cure when the disease is not already beyond the control of medicine.

TOWN COUNCIL.

The Water Works and [illegible] Waterway —The Cow By-law—[illegible] Hall— Mr. Kingan's Claim [illegible]—The Mayor Cuts the Gordian Knot.

Pursuant to adjournment the Council met in the Council Chamber on [illegible]day evening, August 31st. Present—[illegible] in the chair, Messrs. Davidson, [illegible], Millar, Yelland, Douglas, [illegible], Crawford, Kendry and Hartley.

After routine,

COMMUNICATIONS

were received from

The License Commissioners of the West Riding, with a statement of license moneys due the town.

From Mr. R. Kingan, in respect to his claim for compensation for damage caused by the "Missing Link" at the junction with the Lakefield line at Brock street.

From E. C. Hill, in reference to the cow by-law, and desiring to address the Council on the subject.

In answer to a communication from the Celebration Committee, of the True Blues, permission was given to use the Drill Shed grounds, and also to put up street arches on the day of the Orange Celebration, August 12th.

Mr. Hill addressed the Council, and asserted that a pound keeper had had his lads out on Sunday looking for cows to impound. He complained of this excessive zeal, and closed his remarks by offering the town half the receipts from poundage fees if they used a lot he had suitable for a pound. The question was referred to the Committee on Appointments.

THE WATER DIFFICULTY.

The Clerk, on being asked, said it was the opinion of Mr. E. B. Edwards, Town Solicitor, that the petitions for hydrants required to be renewed and presented yearly.

Several members spoke on the subject of the claim for compensation made by the Water Works Company for water used outside the limits covered by the petitions for hydrants for fire purposes, when Mr. Millar read clause three of the water works by-law, as follows:—"It is also further enacted that in any arrangement that may be made with the said Water Company for supplying of hydrants for fire protection, it shall be and form part of such arrangement, that without any further charge all such hydrants shall be used for all such public purposes as the Council of the said town may from time to time direct." He claimed that this effectively disposed of the Company's claim.

The water works by-law was also read by the Clerk, and the contract with the Water Works Company, the latter seeming to sustain the claim of the Company for compensation.

The Mayor advised a friendly conference with the Directors of the Company, and several Councillors urged the fairness of liberal treatment the Company and its claims deserved at the hands of the Council and the town.

At length it was moved by Mr. Keadry, seconded by Mr. Menzies, that the Fire, Water and Gas Committee be requested to confer with the Water Works Company as to renewing arrangements for fire protection and street watering, and to report to the Council at a special meeting to be held for the purpose.

The motion was agreed to.

In reply to a question respecting the striking of the rate, the Clerk replied that the chairmen of the different committees had not reported how much they would severally require for the current year.

THE DRUMMOND CASE.

On motion of Mr. Allin, the Clerk was instructed to issue a cheque for $1,000 for the maintenance of Isabella Drummond in the Home for Incurables, in accordance with the report of the Charity Committee, adopted at the last meeting of this Council, which provides for the repayment of $750—Carried.

COLLECTOR'S ROLL.

Mr. Davidson moved, seconded by Mr. Kelly, that the Clerk instruct the Collector to return the roll for 1883 at once.—Carried.

MR. KINGAN'S CLAIM.

Mr. Kingan appeared before the council, and was heard in reference to his claim for damages, sustained by the construction of the Missing Link. He asserted that the Grand Trunk had not paid the award of the arbitrators, who had pronounced on his claims, as had been requested by resolution of the council, and he called on the council to give effect to the alternative of the resolutions recently passed, relating to the taking up of the rails. He held the council responsible for the damage done to his property, and expected it to protect his rights as a ratepayer.

Various councillors expressed varying opinions on the subject, and Mr. Kingan said he was expected to take $1,000, for damage to his property, which witnesses before the arbitrators, swore was worth $3,500.

Mayor Cox then

and settled the matter by offering to buy the property—the half acre fronting Bethune street—for the sum of $3,500; accepting the risk of getting damages from the Railway Company. It was understood that Mr. Kingan agreed to accept this offer.

Council adjourned to meet at the call of the Mayor.

"I marry that fellow, ma!" exclaimed Nellie. "No, I would rather die than have him. What! marry him with all his pains and aches. Never; not till he tries Crowfoot Bitters."

THE CALCUTT CUP COMPETITION.

The Junior Peterboroughs Win the First Heat.

The "stars in their courses" seem to have fought against the competition for the magnificent trophy cup offered for competition by Mr. H. Calcutt. The first attempt at Idyl Wild on Dominion Day resulted in nothing, from there being no opponents for the first twelve of the Peterboroughs, who, at great inconvenience and sacrifice, were present to meet any claimants for the cup. On Thursday last the competition was postponed by the almost all day down-pour of rain, and even the arrangement to begin play for the junior cup was unable to be carried out on account of the absence of the Millbrook team, which was to play the first heat with the Norwood club team.

A GAME AT LAST.

On Friday afternoon, however, the Norwood twelve and the junior twelve of the Peterborough club played the first trial heat for the "Calcutt Brewery Cup." The following teams contested the possession of the cup the first round.

Mr. H. P. Holcomb, of Toronto, filled the position of referee, to general satisfaction. There was a fair attendance of spectators, and both the Fire Brigade Band and the City Band were present to furnish music. About half-past two play began.

The first game lasted with alternating success to either side for eighteen minutes, time without incident of special notice, and was won by McKelvie putting the ball through, thus scoring first game for the Norwoods.

The second game was, perhaps, one of the quickest games on the record, of this field, anyway. On the face Carveth secured the ball, which Mooney took in charge, and made a clip at goal, which, however, passed behind. Myers then made a drop on goal, which was parried. He again secured the ball and passed it through, the game lasting only about 20 seconds.

The third game lasted thirty-six minutes, and was won for the Norwoods by Robertson, who made a low, swift shot from centre field which sent the ball between the poles.

The fourth game was of 23 minutes' duration. There were two or three close calls on Norwood's position before Canning, with a fine shot from centre field, gave the fourth game to the Junior Peterboroughs.

The fifth game—the rubber of the match—was a hotly fought one, and lasted about fifty minutes. Near the close of it there were a couple of close calls on the Norwood flags, the Juniors making a claim of game, which the umpire disallowed, but before long Dyell passed the ball through the Norwood stakes, thus winning the fifth game of the match, and the match for the junior twelve of the Peterborough Lacrosse Club.

SECOND HEAT—MILLBROOK AND PETERBOROUGH.

After nearly three hours hard and continuous play the Juniors naturally were not in the best wind for playing the second heat, but on the condition of a short rest and the substitution of fresh man—Kelly—for Heeps, who was disabled, they consented to play. It being near six o'clock it was agreed that the team taking most games within the hour was to be the winner. The Junior team, with the change above noted, went in to play against the following team of the Millbrooks:

J. McKiver	Goal
H. Richards	Point
J. Natrass	Cover Point
W. Coomb	Defence Field
R. McMann	do.

C. Duncan	Attack Field
G. Brown	do.
H. Smith	do.
J. Richards	2nd Home
D. Powell	1st Home
C. Duncan	Field Captain
B. Kells	Umpire

This match was decided with head-swimming rapidity, the three games being played through in six minutes from the first face.

The first game was half a minute old when Myers put the ball between the poles.

The seconded lasted three minutes, and was won for the Peterboroughs by Canning.

The third game required only two and a half minutes, Kelly this time scoring the game and winning for the Junior twelve the first heat of the tournament for the "Brewery Cup."

Immediately after the match the Norwood Club catered for the second heat of the "Brewery Cup" competition—the tournament to be held on the Ashburnham grounds on the morning of the Civic Holiday, August 12th.

SOUTH MONAGHAN.

The young woman who was killed on the Midland Railway at Port Hope on Monday evening last, proves to be Minnie Victoria, daughter of Mr. Richard Dawson, Lot No. 4, broken front, South Monaghan, aged twenty-two years. She has been subject to fits of melancholy for the past six years, and at times would wander away from home. She left home on Monday about ten o'clock, in her ordinary every day apparel, with only a coarse straw hat on, print dress and linen apron or slip. Search was immediately made for her by her father and brother, but only Thursday night they accidentally heard that a woman had been killed on the track here, and went to Port Hope to make enquiries; on examination it was found to be the lost daughter. She must have walked twelve or perhaps fourteen miles from the time she left home up to the time the accident happened. The body was exhumed and taken by her friends to their home for interment. The afflicted parents and relatives have the sympathy of all their neighbors and friends in their sad affliction.—Guide.

James Brayley, Hamilton, says:—"I read the testimonials for McGregor's Speedy Cure and found that I had not to go to New York Philadelphia, Louisiana or Texas to find living witnesses of its value, we had plenty of persons right here to prove its merits. I got a bottle and it helped me right away, I was as bad with Billous Fever and Indigestion as I think any any one could be, I have taken three bottles and am nearly well and can eat any kind of food without hurting me. I may say that I am better than I ever expected to be." Free Trial bottles at J. McKee's Drug Store 31-2t

The Art Interchange.

Le Printemp, by Alfred Stevens, an exquisite picture (18x8½ inches) is offered as a supplement to the Art Interchange of July 31. It shows a landscape, in the foreground of which is the full length figure of a girl leaning against one of two trees which rise straight, tall and bare behind her. The immediate foreground is filled with grasses and wildflowers and birds, while a little to the left a small tree in full blossom. The picture as a whole is one of the most beautiful examples of engraving ever offered to the public, and is well worthy of a frame. Published by William Whitlock, 140 Nassau street, New York.

The Brown-McGregor Match Trot.

FIRST TASTE OF THE TURF.

At the Driving Park—The Track and the Trot—The "Gray Mare the Better Horse"—Three Straight Heats for "Fanny B."—Tid-bits of Information Respecting the Park.

THE TRACK.

The mile trot, best three in five, between Ed. Brown's "Fanny B." and McGregor's "Bay Mare," took place at the new Driving Park on Friday afternoon, August first. There was a good attendance, principally of sporting men, though several carriages containing ladies graced the scene with their presence. While admitting the fine future possibilities of the present track, its condition on Friday was anything but favorable to comfortable trotting, not to speak of speed. The track was very heavy, owing to its having only recently been graded, while the recent rains made it particularly soft and spongy. Its surface was uneven, for the track is left in its present condition (pending operations to thoroughly level it) till the grass turfs turned under shall have become thoroughly decomposed. The Association have made the track as good as possible under the circumstances.

THE HORSES.

A little after two o'clock the shoppers, driven by their respective owners—"Fanny B." Mr. Brown, and "McGregor's Bay Mare," Mr. McGregor, McGregor's mount, Fleetwood, got in an appearance in "making entrance." "Fanny B." is a fragment figure on our streets, and is, consequently well known. McGregor's mare is a beautiful bloke colored, clean-limbed and with neat points, but of a nervous temperament that calls for careful driving.

Mr. Charles Stapleton acted as sole judge and starter, although it was unanimously supported by a gentleman whose business was supposed to "insure" against "shaks" of disagreement, but fortunately everything passed off so smoothly that his services were not required.

FIRST HEAT.—"Fanny B." drew the pole and the flyers were off the first score, the gray mare leading slightly, an advantage she increased before the first turn, which threw the bay mare off her feet and back in the race. She also broke on the next turn, and several times in this and every succeeding heat. "Fanny" finished the first heat, with a good lead, in 3:14. In timing the trot it is only fair to subtract twenty or thirty seconds from the record on account of the heaviness of the track as compared with good trotting turf, which would make the record about 2:45 or 2:50.

SECOND HEAT.—This was, in its main features, a repetition of the first, both as to start, progress and finish. Time 3:21½.

THIRD HEAT.—The two first beats McGregor's mare had been working in a four-wheel trotting waggon. Her owner thinking that her being thus handicapped, interfered with her speed, put her for the next spin into a trotting sulkey. The scoring this time resulted in an even send-off, which the Norwood mare failed to continue. There was a little more go in this heat, the horses keeping a little better together, "Fanny," however, with a safe lead, which she held to the finish which she made in 3:10, thus winning the third heat, the match and the purse.

NOTES.

The trot was an entirely friendly one, and not a dispute nor "kick" marred the pleasant first hours' sport at the Peterborough Driving Park. It is to be hoped that this race, its results and management, will be the key-note to regulate the future sporting events to take place here.

The soil of the track is excellently adapted to make a good turf. It is a clay loam, with enough sand to prevent its getting unduly hard. It resembles the soil of the Buffalo Driving Park. Negotiations are going on to have the grading of the track at once completed—and in first-class style.

The future lacrosse ground, on the inside of the track has been ploughed, harrowed and partially levelled. When it has been got down to shape, which will be in a few days, it will, in respect of size and level evenness of surface, be as good a field for the game as there is in Canada.

The ten foot fence enclosing the Park is well under way and will be finished by the 25th of August, as called for by the contract with Mr. Thomas Rutherford. It costs $1,000.

The grand stand, which will be placed near the north-west corner of the Park, will afford seating accommodation for about 1,500. Its construction will be begun as soon as the fence is finished.

The stables will be erected on the south side of the track. They will supply stalls for twenty horses, including harness, rooms, etc., etc.

The track itself will be railed off from the remaining grounds by two fences, one outside and one inside the track.

Arrangements are being made for a race meeting on September 6th, when a fine programme of running and trotting races will be presented. On the same date a half mile running (foot) race will take place between Williamson, of Midland City, and Hambly, of Port Hope.

It is hoped, and on good grounds, for the future of the Peterborough Park, that it will always be so managed that in all its meetings the "race shall be to the swift." Only by such meetings can it expect to secure and maintain the support of the public.

Just received a choice lot of Prints, entirely new designs in dark colors at Turnbull's.

BOBCAYGEON.

The fire that was observed last week during the storm, and that was supposed to be only a short distance away, was on the property of Mr. Christopher Fell, of Somerville. three large, first class frame barns were destroyed, together with twenty tons of hay, and all the miscellaneous contents. A flash of lightning struck the building. As is quite customary among farmers, during the hot weather, Mr. Fell and the hired man were sleeping in one of the barns, on the hay, and Mrs Fell, who first observed the fire from the house, which was near by, had some difficulty in awaking the men in time to get them out. The buildings were insured for $2,200, but the loss will still be heavy.

The new steamer, Maple Leaf, arrived from Lindsay, on Wednesday. She is a gay little craft, and a trifle larger than the old Maple Leaf, with a much more roomy cabin, being the full width of the boat, and fitted with chairs, instead of the fixed seats around the sides. The owner, Mr. Davis, of the Nogey's Creek Mills, intends putting her on the lower lake, four days in the week, Mondays, Tuesdays, Fridays and Saturdays. She will probably make a run to Bridgenorth on Monday. There's a good trade, says the level headed Independent, to be worked up between this point and Peterborough, if rightly managed. The Peterborough market is always a good one to sell in; its shopping conveniences and advantages are equal to any city; its tradesman are all active, lively, energetic men; and commercially and socially Peterborough is the leading town of the Province. The Maple Leaf will be a great public convenience.

A common cold should not be neglected. Downs' Elixir will cure it. 32-4t

NEW [illegible] BUILDING BUSINESS.

Mr. A. Clegg's Complete Preparations.

The growing importance and population of Peterborough are suggested by the fact that, though several other establishments of the kind already exist, another competitor in the undertaking line enters the business. But there is room for any new industry where the promoter is determined to take a leading position therein.

Mr. A. Clegg has added to his furniture business the allied vocation of undertaking, and, in order to cater to the public taste in a manner in keeping with its demands, he has made the most complete arrangements in fitting up his business premises in keeping with the styles in the leading cities.

The second floor of his warerooms is fitted up in the most modern and ingenious manner, for the display of undertaking goods. A cabinet is built along one side of the wall, containing a series of isolated compartments, one for each variety or style of coffin or casket in stock. The casket is fastened to the inner side of the door of each compartment, and when it is required to display the same to a customer, the door, which is hinged at the bottom end, is lowered and rests horizontally on proper supports, about a foot from the floor. The customer has thus a chance to inspect the casket, ready trimmed and free from dust, make his selection, and give his order, which is filled from the stock in the warerooms on the third storey. By the suitable of the subject above alluded to, which is handsomely finished in a style to correspond with its contents, is a closet filled with shelves, holding shrouds, burial robes, trimmings, etc., etc.

To make the equipment of his establishment complete, Mr. Clegg has had made at Messrs. Fitzgerald & Stanger's which has only one equal (that of Mr. John Young, undertaker, Toronto,) and no superior in the Dominion. The cost of Mr. Clegg's hearse is $1,400. The hearse rests on platform gearing, the hubs of the wheels being finished with broad silver bands. The body is composed principally of plate glass. The side panels are composed of [illegible] plate glass, 3x5½ feet, set in a frame in which is set a dark purple glass band. This glass [illegible] the ornamentation beneath it, which consists of floral decorations and suitable engravings such as the urn and the lily, harp and shepherd's crook, anchor, cross and crown, etc. The ends of the hearse are oval, with plate glass set to the curve. The top is ornamented with six gold funeral urns, with handles and draperies of silver. A square silver railing, set diagonally, passing through and resting on ornate gold standards, surrounds the top, its continuity broken only by the urns; at the ends the rails of coarse cordage to the outward curve of the oval. Inside, the hearse is elaborately finished. For young subjects the hangings consist of box-pleated lambrequins of heavy, white broadcloth, edged with three-inch gold bullion fringe. For other subjects, the hangings are black broadcloth, with the same kind of gold fringe. The "mound" is composed of black walnut in oil, its beveled sides are of French burl veneer walnut. On each side of the mound are silver rails set diagonally and piercing gold standards, which terminate superiorly in bouquet holders. The seat is upholstered in black broadcloth. The hammercloth, which is of the same material, is trimmed with a double row of black fringe, and the ends are set out with oblique crosses in high relief. Two fine lamps, one on each side, complete its equipment.

Altogether this hearse is a splendid specimen of mortuary equipage in keeping with the other first-class appointments of Mr. Clegg's establishment, which are now at the service of the public.

EDUCATIONAL NEWS.

ART SCHOOLS IN CONNECTION WITH MECHANICS' INSTITUTES.

It is proposed to open, in connection with the Mechanics' Institutes in the different parts of the Province, drawing classes on the same basis as those conducted for teachers in the Art School. Drawing has hitherto been very much neglected in the Public Schools, and by means of the Art School this will be overcome, but it is believed that by establishing classes in connection with Mechanics' Institutes the artisan classes will be reached and enabled to be more useful in their various capacities than formerly. With the view to encourage Mechanics' Institutes it is proposed to issue certificates for all who take the prescribed course, which certificate will be recognized as qualifying the person holding it to teach industrial drawing, either in Public Schools or Mechanics' Institutes. The Government allows a grant of $100 per annum to each school where drawing classes are established under the new regulations. In addition to the Legislative grant of $100, each Institute which expends at least $10 besides the grant for evening classes, will receive $1 for every student over fifteen who attends two-thirds of the time and obtains one certificate $2 for every student who receives two certificates, or $4 for every student who receives all the certificates in drawing. There must be at least 12 pupils over fifteen years of age, before a class can be established. The term is to consist of thirty six lessons of two hours each, and certificates will be given to those students who pass a satisfactory examination.

COUNTY MODEL SCHOOLS.

The County Model Schools open as usual on the second Tuesday in September. It is proposed to allow Boards of Trustees to charge a fee of not more than five dollars on every Model School student. The only change in this regulation is that heretofore the fee was imposed by the County Board of Examiners.

OPENING OF THE NORMAL SCHOOLS.

As the Normal Schools open on the 19th of August it is desirable that those who propose to attend the fall session should make an early application to the Department. It is not necessary for them to wait to see the result of the non-professional examination, as their application can be entertained contingent upon their passing this examination.

HOW "SWEET BY AND BY" WAS WRITTEN.

Mr. Bennett and Mr. Webster were intimate friends. The former came in to where his friend Bennett was at business one day, greatly depressed in spirits. "What is the matter now?" said Bennett, noticing his sad countenance. "No matter," said Webster, "it will be right by-and-by. "Yes, that sweet by-and-by," said Bennet. "Wouldn't that sentiment make a good hymn, Webster?" "Maybe it would," replied Webster, indifferently.

Turning to his desk, Bennett wrote the three verses of the hymn, and handed them to Webster. When he read them his whole demeanor changed. Stepping to his desk he began to write the notes. Having finished them, he got his violin and played the melody. In a few minutes more he had the four parts of the chorus jotted down. It was not over thirty minutes from the thought of the hymn before the friends and two others, who had come in in the meantime, were singing all the parts together. A bystander, who had been attracted by the music and had listened in tearful silence, remarked, "That hymn is immortal."

It must have been sung in public shortly afterward, for within two weeks almost every child was singing it. It is now sung in every land under the sun.

COBOURG.

The very neat delivery wagon, manufactured for Mr. E. Winch, butcher, by Mr. John Boyd, Baltimore, has numerous admirers.

Last Friday evening the third contest in the double scull race for the Cup presented by the Catholic Association was rowed at the harbor. E. Gordon and P. Nolan scored another victory. Very good time was made in this race, the distance being rowed in less than twelve minutes.

The barley harvest in this section is now becoming general, and several recent fine days have secured the saving of much of it in fine condition. The rain of Wednesday night and Thursday, however, must have colored that portion of the crop cut before.

On Thursday evening last about nine o'clock a fire took place in a shed back of the building occupied by Mrs. Burk, and known as the Wright property. It was completely destroyed, but, through the exertions of the brigade the fire was prevented from spreading to the adjoining buildings. It was evidently incendiarism.

Mr. Dinwoodie has sunk another crib to the south of the one to which we lately referred, and is now engaged in ballasting. He will soon take a turn to the west, toward the long pier, as a step toward the formation of the entrance to the harbor. The boats have now to back out three hundred feet south of the light house, before they can get clear of our piers. Mr. Dinwoodie is making very satisfactory progress.

BOBCAYGEON.

Flocks of young ducks are said to be more numerous than usual. Good sport is expected when the season opens.

A mink was seen swimming in the canal, and playing about the shore. They are quite numerous. The low price of their fur probably has something to do with their increase in numbers. They are not so closely trapped as they used to be.

The revolution has taken place—the whole social system of the village is turned topsy-turvy. It occurred at dawn of day, this morning. Thos. Bick, the village butcher, closed up his books, positively shut down on credit, and lowered the price of meat. That's the talk. The cash system for ever, and a fiver thrown in. We'll take the liver.

The business men find times extremely dull. The farmers of the neighborhood are busy with their harvest. The fall wheat and barley are turning out well. Root crops promise to be fair. Potatoes, in some localities, good. New potatoes, two weeks ago, were selling at two dollars a bushel, now they are one dollar a bushel, and every day brings them down.

NORWOOD.

A man named O'Rourke, employed on the C. & Q. R'y here, was charged before Reeve Stephenson, on Monday morning last, with having stolen a watch from Mr. Young, a brakeman on the same road. He was found guilty and sentenced to a term at the "Castle." Constable Hill took him up on the afternoon train.

ASPHODEL.

Mr. Thomas McMillan, of Asphodel, is about purchasing Mr. Starr's excellent farm near Norwood. The price agreed upon is $6,100.

For a long time past Mr. Wm. Webster, who resides in the township of Asphodel, near Norwood, has been trying to arrive at a satisfactory settlement with the Ontario and Quebec Railway Company re the "right of way" through his farm. Although the road only occupies nine acres, it cuts his farm up badly, and hence difficulty in settling. On Tuesday last, however, Mr. Webster accepted $1,150 for the land, and the matter is now settled.

OMEMEE.

The road and bridge committee of the county council met Thursday afternoon, and awarded the contract for the building of the iron bridge over Pigeon river at Omemee. Messrs. McNeely & Walters have the contract for the stone work, and Mr. Law, the well known builder of the iron bridge over the Otonabee, has the contract for the iron work. The plans were prepared by Mr. Duffus, and it is unnecessary to say with such reliable and practical men the bridge will be substantially and finely built.

PORT HOPE.

Mayor Hagel of Port Hope caught a deer while fishing at Midland one day last week—after an exciting chase in the bay.

Police Magistrate, R. H. Holland, left town Thursday for three weeks or four weeks holiday in the North-west.

The Orangemen of Port Hope will give an excursion to Midland on Wednesday, Sept. 10th., 1884, when the fare will be placed at the low sum of one dollar. This is likely to be the excursion of the season.

During the thunder-storm which passed over the town on Sunday morning, the lightning struck the wires of the telegraph office, and melting the leading gas pipe in the office, the gas took fire. There was not much damage done.

The dog by-law came into force on Friday, Aug. 1st., Any dogs found running at large on the streets hereafter, will be impounded and afterwards destroyed, if owners do not put in a claim for the pup. It is coming rapidly into favor, and the applications for tags are numerous. Over one hundred have already been supplied to owners of canines.

On Monday afternoon, while men were employed unloading coal from the schooner Lewis Rose, the hoisting tackle gave way, and a block pulley fell on William Hudson, striking him on the head, and inflicting a very dangerous wound. The injured man was at once attended to, and it is yet doubtful if he will recover. Hudson is a married man, and has a family of small children.

OSHAWA.

The employees of the Joseph Hall Mann factoring Company who have been on strike last evening accepted Mr. Glen's terms, and agreed to return to work this morning.

HAMILTON.

One of the chief attractions at the picnic at Rice Lake in connection with the new E. C. Church at Harwood, on the civic holiday, Aug. 16th., will be a mail race for $25, 3 lbs.

ORILLIA.

Out of 66 candidates who wrote at the Orillia High School for the last entrance examination 39 failed to make a mark on the dictation paper and the Packet very smartly remarks. "When shall blunders in connection with the examinations cease? The dictation paper in the recent entrance examinations would have been better suited to those leaving High School."

OTS.

We have been shown a magnificent sample of new fall wheat from the farm of Mr. B. Walker, the popular reeve of Ops. We have never seen a finer sample. The berry is remarkably large and plump. Mr. Walker had sixteen acres, but,alas were so badly winter-killed that they were plowed up and sowed to oats and to barley.

A patron of the factory in Ops writes as follows: "It is reported there are some skim milk men in the neighborhood of Pogue's spring cheese factory. Now, a skim milk man is a man that skims his cow's milk before he sends it to the cheese factory, and the souls of these men are about as thin and miserable as the milk they send to the cheese factory.

LINDSAY.

Mr. Michael O'Brien, headmaster of Lindsay separate school, Mrs. O'Brien and master John O'Brien are spending a couple of weeks with friends in Peterborough.

Seventy-three pounds is the weight of a fine spring lamb killed to serve the appetites of his customers by Mr. Wickham, butcher. Mr. Wickham says that for for spring lamb the above was the finest ever killed by him. It was fed by a Manvers farmer whose name was not given.

Another chapter has been developed in the mystery connected with the money lost by Mrs. Hickey of Downeyville and found by an Ops farmer living near Mount Horeb. It is stated that the second party, who gave the information to Mr. Hickey recently that led to the recovery of the money, did not pass the intervening time in Michigan as he said at first, but was living in Lindsay and vicinity all the time. It is understood he got a good sum from the finder for keeping quiet but in due course had some difference with him, and resolved to "inform" in order to get even. He asked and got $50 for informing. Those who know all the circumstances and the parties condemn the finder severely for his dishonesty; but the condemnation of the "informer" is naturally much more severe. He should have given the information at first.

The Wonderful Power of Shaker Blood Syrup, in eradicating every form of Scrofula, has been so clearly and fully demonstrated, that it leaves no shadow of doubt about its being the greatest medical discovery of this generation.

WHAT THE BAD BOY GOT.

"Once upon a time," began the teacher, "two brothers started to Sunday school on Sabbath morning. Their way led past a fine peach orchard, where the trees were hanging over with ripe, luscious peaches. One of the brothers proposed going into the orchard and getting some of the fruit, but the other refused and sped away, leaving his companion greedily devouring the peaches. Now it happened that the owner of the orchard saw them, and the next day rewarded the good boy, who refused to steal the peaches, by giving him fifty cents. He got a prize for his honesty, and what do you suppose the other boy got for his dishonesty?" "He got the peaches!" yelled every member of the class, and another penitentiary story was ended.

DEATH OF A VETERAN LIBERAL.

Mr. P. N. Pacaud, ex-M.P. of St. Norbert, Arthabaska P. Q., died Thursday night. The deceased had always taken a leading part in political campaigns in the interest of the Liberal party. At the time of the rebellion in 1837 he was a banker at St. Hyacinthe, and issued at the time $300,000 on the Bank of St. Hyacinthe, with which he was connected. He fought at St. Denis and was imprisoned with others for three years.

HIS SWEET YOUNG WIFE.

"George, dear," said a sweet young wife to her husband, "I've had a talk with the servants this morning, and have agreed to raise their wages. They said everything was so dear now—rent was high, and the price of meat and butter had risen to such a price, and everything—I thought this was reasonable, because I've so often heard you complain of the same thing."

W. M. McLellan, Lyn N. S., writes: "I was afflicted with rheumatism, and had given up all hopes of a cure. By chance I saw Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil recommended. I immediately sent (fifty miles) and purchased four bottles, and with only two applications I was able to get around, and although I have not used one bottle, I am nearly well. The other three bottles I gave around to my neighbors, and I have had so many calls for more, that I feel bound to relieve the afflicted by writing to you for a supply."

A LAPSUS LINGO.

"John," said Mrs. Logan, in a tenderly reproachful tone, "you must be more particular about your grammar. I notice you invariably speak of your friend Jones, as "me and him."

"Oh, I know better than that, of course," replied the gentleman, "that is simply a lapsus lingo; I mean 'him and me' every time."

Arnica & Oil Liniment is very healing and soothing, and does wonders when applied to old sores. 32-44

The Versatility of the Morse Alphabet.

Such is the adaptability of the Morse alphabet used in telegraphing that it can be communicated by the sense of hearing, taste, sight or feeling.

About twenty years ago Col. J. J. S. Wilson, of St. Louis, then an active telegraph superintendent, was on a tour in the southern part of Missouri. It was a season of floods. Large portions of the country adjacent to the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers were inundated, and the wreckage had included the washing away of many miles of poles and wire. It became necessary to communicate with a point on the Missouri bank of the Mississippi River by telegraph. The fertile invention of Col. Wilson directed that a locomotive be run to the Illinois bank. Mounting the foot-board, he grasped the valve, and soon the shrill screams of the locomotive whistle were heard by the listening operators on the other shore, whistling out Wilson's message in the long and short sounds of the alphabet, familiar to them as that of their primers. Communication was kept up in this way for several hours.

A rich citizen of San Francisco owes his life to his knowledge of telegraphy acquired many years ago. Wandering over Southern California as a prospector, he was captured by a band of Mexican desperadoes. They carried him to an abandoned hacienda, and with mocking cruelty set him at their table to feast, before, as they told him, they killed him. The prisoner recognised among his captors an old companion also an operator, who had gone to the bad a little time before. The recognition was mutual, but neither dared to address the other. The captive's quick wit improvised a sounder out of his knife and fork, and, while to the others he appeared playing with them, his cry for assistance was read and understood by his old-time comrade. They formed in this way a plan of escape, which was successfully carried out.

A train on a Western railroad several years ago met with a terrible accident miles from any station. Among the passengers was a young telegrapher. His ready mind took in the situation, and climbing the nearest pole it was an easy task to cut the wire, and using the two ends as a key sent a message for help. To receive the reply was a more difficult task. Here again the young man's invention stood in good stead and spurred him on to an exhibition of nerve that is rarely met with. Admonishing the distant operator to send slowly, he placed the cut ends of the wire upon his tongue, and by the strength of each shock to that delicate member made out the letters until the message was complete. That young man's sense of taste was destroyed and returned only in a weakened degree after two or three years.

There happened to be an operator on board of a small coasting schooner which was cast on a Florida reef in such a position that escape from the ship and aid from the shore were both out of the question during the night of the wreck. Throughout the long hours of suspense he kept up communication with another operator on shore by means of a lantern, and words of hope, of sympathy and encouragement passed back and forth until day dawned and made rescue possible.

The United States Government in several of its lighthouses has the lanterns arranged so as to emit long and short flashes of light, which form certain letters of the telegraph code. This is a method of distinguishing the beacon, which is easily understood by a little practice.

Americanisms Abroad.

A correspondent of the Boston Transcript, writing from Florence, says: "Yesterday Lady W. asked me what that Americanism, 'I should smile' meant. In despair I boldly retorted that I had never heard that Americanism (I've read it, to be sure), when she informed me that she had heard a Boston gentleman—and she gave me the name of one of Boston's social leaders—use it at a ball, and to a young English girl; it was at a very grand ball, and given by a peer, too, in England. When scenery palls upon us, when art grows burdensome, when curious ways and manners about us cease to interest, here in these pensions, filled with an equal number of English and Americans, conversation turns on Americanisms in speech and etiquette. People of every other nation forgive the peculiarities of people of every other nation, save the English, who won't forgive us anything that we do, if we do it differently from themselves. The Russian ladies about us smoke cigarettes, which the English regard complacently, because it is the custom of their country, and no English woman expects Russians to follow her standard; but we poor Americans can't do the least thing un-English without condemnation. The moment you open your mouths we know you are Americans' an English lady said to me yesterday, as if we ought to be ashamed of the fact, and in consequence feel inclined to keep our mouths shut. 'Before you open your mouth I know you are English,' I thought, 'yet I do not demand that you should aim to look like us.'"

HIAWATHA.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

The Rev. T. Woolsey and family, prior to their removal from this mission, were favored by the Indians and others, with a farewell social, followed up by the cheif and leading men of the band, conveying assurances of their best wishes toward them. Miss Woolsey as their organist, also received a pleasing address, accompanied by a purse, as a parting gift. The following is a copy of the address:—

To MISS. WOOLSEY,

On this occasion of your departure from Hiawatha, and possibly, our separation forever, we desire to express our appreciation of your valuable services as organist, and willingness to render assistance at all times, when requested; of our sincere regard for you as a friend, and of our respect for you as a lady. You have entirely won our confidence and esteem, and we beg you to accept this small gift as a very slight token of our regard for you. We sincerely wish you a happy and peaceful life. May God protect and care for you. Signed on behalf of the Rice Lake Band of Indians, by

M. G. PAUDUSH,
Chief, &c.

Peter Kieffer, Buffalo, says: "I was badly bitten by a horse a few days ago, and was induced by a friend, who witnessed the occurrence, to try Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil. It relieved the pain almost immediately, and in four days the wound was completely healed. Nothing can be better for fresh wounds." See that you get the genuine Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, as there are imitations on the market.

AYER'S PILLS.

A large proportion of the diseases which cause human suffering result from derangement of the stomach, bowels, and liver. AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS act directly upon these organs, and are especially designed to cure the diseases caused by their derangement, including Constipation, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Headache, Dysentery, and a host of other ailments, for all of which they are a safe, sure, prompt, and pleasant remedy. The extensive use of these PILLS by eminent physicians in regular practice, shows unmistakably the estimation in which they are held by the medical profession.

These PILLS are compounded of vegetable substances only, and are absolutely free from calomel or any other injurious ingredient.

A Sufferer from Headache writes: "AYER'S PILLS are invaluable to me, and are my constant companion. I have been a severe sufferer from Headache, and your PILLS are the only thing I could look to for relief. One dose will quickly move my bowels and free my head from pain. They are the most effective and the easiest physic I have ever found. It is a pleasure to me to speak in their praise, and I always do so when occasion offers."

J. T. HAYES."

Mexia, Texas, June 17, 1882.

The REV. FRANCIS B. HARLOWE, writing from Atlanta, Ga., says: "For some years past I have been subject to constipation, from which, in spite of the use of medicines of various kinds, I suffered increasing inconvenience, until some months ago I began taking AYER'S PILLS. They have entirely corrected the costive habit, and have vastly improved my general health."

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS correct irregularities of the bowels, stimulate the appetite and digestion, and by their prompt and thorough action give tone and vigor to the whole physical economy.

CHOLERA

COMING!

The countries where Cholera prevails, as in India, China and Africa, Pain-Killer is considered the surest and safest of all known remedies, and the natives place the most perfect reliance in it.

Read the following extract from the letter of a missionary in China:

DEAR SIRS:—I ought to have acknowledged long ago the box of Pain-Killer you had the goodness to send me last year. Its coming was most providential. I believe hundreds of lives were saved, under God, by it. The Cholera appeared here soon after we received it. We resorted at once to the Pain-Killer, using as directed for Cholera. A Bet was kept of all to whom the Pain-Killer was given, and our native assistants assured us that eight out of every ten to whom it was prescribed, recovered.

Believe me, dear sirs, gratefully and faithfully yours.

How the Popular Toy is Made.

In all the toy, game and sporting goods stores the new supply of balls for the game of base ball has been laid in, and the balls, lying in pasteboard compartments and rolled up in tinfoil, or having their coverings colored red or blue, are as pretty as so many Easter eggs. The first-class regulation ball for this year is no different from that in use last year. It costs $1.50, and sells at wholesale at the rate of $15 a dozen. It weighs about five ounces, and when thrown on a board floor sounds like a young paving stone. It is just about as solid and as heavy as a turnip of the same size, and, though it is perfectly round and smooth, and the stitches are almost even with the leather, it stings the uncalloused hands of its catcher as if it were red hot or covered with prickers.

Base balls are dear because they are made by hand, and they are made by hand because they must be wound very tightly, carefully and evenly. The basis of each one is a little lump of Para rubber, round and weighing an ounce. Wound around this in every direction is worsted yarn. In some balls, after a thick layer of yarn is wound on, the ball is dipped in rubber, then more yarn is wound on; then it is dipped again, and finally yet more is wound on and then the cover is fitted over it. One ball affected by many professionals has a thin skin of concrete midway between the cover and the rubber. Girls make all the balls. The process is something like that of making certain mixed drinks, wherein the bartender puts in lemon to make them sour and sugar to make them sweet. Players want what is called a dead ball, that is one that won't bounce much. A stone will bounce more than a base ball ought to. So the rubber is put in to make it bounce just a little, and the yarn is wound tight and concrete is added to stop it bouncing at all. Thus the happy medium is reached. Sometimes melted vulcanized rubber is used.

The best balls are covered with horse-skin because it is strong and tough. Many of these are sewed with catgut, but in damp weather the catgut loosens and therefore at such times these balls are used which are stitched with flax.

Professionals have agreed upon the best form of balls and have ruled that it shall accord with these specifications:

The ball must weigh not less than five nor more than five and one-quarter ounces avoirdupois. It must measure not less than nine nor more than nine and one-quarter inches in circumference. It must be composed of woolen yarn, and shall contain not more than one ounce of vulcanized rubber in mold form, and shall be covered with leather.

Base balls can be purchased for 5, 10, 20, 25 and 50 cents. Many of these are machine made. They are stuffed with odds and ends of leather, wound up with cord, pressed into shape and covered with common leather. The second time one is hit with a bat it assumes the shape of an egg. A little later it still resembles an egg—one that has been hit with a club.—New York Sun.

Old and Faithful.

There are real love matches in Russia, judging from the story that two people had loved and been constant to each other for forty-two years, the man being then 25 and the woman sweet 16. Fortune, however, in their case was cruel. The couple knew that to marry and be penniless would be madness. So for forty-two years they have waited. The man now, by industry, owns a two-story wooden house, and the woman has saved, by thrift and care, 500 rubles, and their patience and perseverance are at last rewarded by a happy marriage. An eye-witness declares that it is impossible to relate the happiness which shone in the eyes of these old and faithful lovers as they were made one by the priestly blessing.

It does look suspicious when a drug firm gives a package of cucumber seed with every dime's worth of goods bought. But then we mustn't judge of a man's motive, no matter how enterprising he may be to increase his trade. Chromos go with dry goods, why not cucumber seeds with drugs? These seeds will bear fruit and trade in a few more weeks.

Coming.

My own and my only Love some night
Shall keep her tryst, shall come from the [illegible]
And oh, her robe of matchless white!
And oh, and oh, the breath of her mouth!

And oh, her grace in the grasses sweet!
And oh, her love in the leaves new born!
And oh, and oh, her lily-white feet
Sets daintily down in the dew-wet morn!

The drowsy cattle at night shall kneel
And give God thanks, and shall dream and [illegible]
The stars slip down and a golden seal
Be set on the meadows my Love has blest.

Come back, my Love, come sudden, come soon,
The world lies waiting as the cold dead lie;
The frightened winds shall wail and the crisp-curled moon
Ridden, wrapped in clouds, up the cold grey sky.

Oh, Summer, my Love, my first, my last Love!
I sit all day by Potomac bank,
Waiting and waiting the voice of the dove—
Waiting, my darling, my own, my dear.
—Joaquin Miller.

Behind the Earthworks.

Ah! it was one of the prettiest June days even Virginia ever saw. There was such a mellow sunshine that every flower and blossom turned its face to be kissed, and there was such a happy, peaceful look down across the fields towards the James river that men forgot for a moment that war existed. In the trees overhead the robins called to each other, and once a blue-bird alighted on the wheel of a field-piece which had its shining brass muzzle thrust through the embrasure, ready to send its shrieking shell whenever hand pulled the lock-string.

There were a thousand of us down behind the earthworks, and we were so quiet that the voice of the colonel reached the last man on the flank as he cautioned us: "My lads, we are going to hold this position against a whole army!"

Sue! A thin line of men—skirmishers to the number of fifty—suddenly break cover from the woods half a mile away and advance upon us. They skulk—they dodge—they drop down and suddenly rise again and advance as stealthily as Indians intent upon surprising a hamlet. Bah! Fifty men against 1,000! No, it is not that. The octopus is in the woods—these skirmishers are the long arms he is reaching out to feel us—to uncover our position—to ascertain our strength.

"Puff! Puff!"

It is the fire of the skirmishers. You know where the watch dog is by his growl. They are trying to provoke the beast to betray his retreat. Zip! Zip! How the bullets sing as they fly over our heads! There is dead silence behind the works. We breathe faster and harder—we clutch our guns with tighter grip, but we are silent. To kill an octopus you must strike at the body. Sever his arms and they will grow again.

"Pop! pop! pop! Zip! zip! zip!

"Steady, lads, and wait for the word!" says the Colonel.

There is no excitement among us. I hear the man on my right shut his teeth with a gritting sound, and the one on my left is breathing like a weary man in profound slumber. If I should look up and down the line I might see pale faces, but I am looking down across the fields and over the heads of the skirmishers. The grandest sight of the war is to see the Octopus of War leave his lair and come forth thirsting for human blood.

Ah! here he comes! His feelers have failed to uncover us, but he can judge for himself that such a short line of works cannot conceal more than a full regiment. He does not know that our right flank rests on a swamp, and our left on an impassable ravine, while our front offers no shelter even for a rabbit. Look! the sight is worth ten years of your life! A full brigade pours out of the woods and forms for the charge. Regiments and companies swing into position as if on parade. The skirmishers redouble their fire, and a general gallops along the front of the brigade, as if to see that every foot is on line with its neighbor.

Now they get the word to advance, and at the same instant our field-pieces open fire. The cruel shell are striking plump into the front rank and tearing men to pieces by the half-dozen, but as the smoke lifts we find the Octopus marching on with steady movement. He wants blood. He will demand drop for drop—and more! Ha! The shriek of shell has changed to the whistle of grape and canister, and the men at the guns are working as if the fate of nations depended upon them. The smoke drops down in a great cloud, and one cannot see beyond his bayonet. Now it is rent and shattered, and it lifts and floats away in great pieces and fragments.

"Now lads—and fire low!"

The Octopus has been staggered—wounded—halted—but here he comes again. Right in front of me I see a face and form which I select as a target. I could kill him now, but I grimly wait for him to come nearer. He is pale with excitement, and as the man at his left is struck down, my target sees the steady step of the line. But only for an instant. Now he is not over forty feet away, and the fire of the musketry has checked the advance. My weapon points straight at him. I am looking right into his eyes. I note his brown curls, his high forehead—the white teeth shut tight together in his excitement. He is not over 20 years old. He has a mother whose poor old heart will almost break to-morrow. He has sisters who will refuse to be comforted for long months. And such a fair-faced boy must have a sweetheart whose very soul will cry out in anguish at the news of his death.

I am going to kill him! The excitement of the check has confused him. He looks to the right and left, and then into my eyes. He is standing almost alone. As our eyes meet he sees murder in mine, and I read an appeal for mercy in his. The result of a battle does not hinge upon the life of a corporal. The war will not be over the sooner for his death. But I take deliberate aim at his breast and press the trigger, and even before I feel the shock of a discharge I see the red blood spray out from the horrible wound, and he falls back with a shriek upon his lips.

The Octopus is beaten back. I go over the works and find my target. Those brown curls are damp with death—the fair face as white as snow—the ground soaked with blood so precious that every drop will call for a hundred tears from women's eyes. The blue eyes are wide open, the lips are parted, and as I bend over him it seems as if his voice came back for an instant to whisper the exclamation: Murderer!

And that was war! That was one of the acts which helped to make a victory for thousands to shout over—for flags to ripple—for rockets to ascend—for children to cheer and women to bless high Heaven!—M. Quad in Detroit Free Press.

Washington county, Mississippi, produces more cotton than any other county in America. It yields 55,000 bales. Yazoo county is second with 45,000 to 50,000 bales.

Smart and Cute American Girls.

English society is naively slow to take the measure of social novelties; and, though London has been flooded by our nasal cousins, the American girl herself is still imperfectly understood. If she is distinguished by one quality more than another among womankind, it is by that attribute which is common to all her countrymen, and generated by their restless life. She is cute—quite cute enough to take every advantage of the momentary confusion she has produced. Now is her critical time, the eager competition of her ever-increasing sisters will destroy her favorable position; she is resolved to take her fortune at the flood, and society hears whispers of a determined invasion in the course of the season as whose eve we have arrived. Outside London she is scarcely to be found. The few princes of whom the inhospitable Roman palaces still boasted have long been carried off. Poor unhappy Paris, as our Socialist friends put it, has been exploited, and Paris of republican advocates and simmering sans-culottism has seen the odious city on the Thames usurp the position of premier city in the world for pleasure-seeking society. Again, the fashionable world of London is in a state of chronic boredom, and is always ready to welcome a new sensation. Together with her novelty the American girl exercises something of the charm which a half-educated visitor always exercises on a conventional society. Pocahontas might have had the town at her feet; her successor is less simple and more schooled than Pocahontas, but, compared with the smart people of Europe, she is uneducated. She has not, that is to say, lived in an atmosphere the creation of centuries charged to an extent impossible to realise with social opinions, conventionalities and traditions. They are born and bred in the European child. Her transgressions and her criticism give her half her piquancy, but what is amusing in her would be embarrassing in her English sister. Her natural quickness of perception has, moreover, been sharpened by more traveling than falls to the lot of the ordinary English girl. Table d'hote and second-rate foreign society, if they have not added to her refinement, have taught her a precocious self-possession. The English girl, though temporarily eclipsed by her rival, need not despair. Her qualities will tell in the long run. The apparent distinction and tact of the American girl is as showy and as smart and as little part of her as her Parisian tresses. Real refinement is the attribute of a leisured class. This does not exist in the States except in the narrow Puritan circle at Boston. The feverish pushing and striving and barbarous ostentation of the men must react upon their sisters. And, indeed, American women are the most showy, restless and unquiet in the world. Repose and dignity are alien to them; smartness is their ideal. Nor are they physically equal to the overshadowed English girl. Far from evolving a superior, American civilization seems destined to evolve an inferior type of woman. The American girl is as different from her English sister as the women of the insipid American parlor fiction are different from the women with hearts and brains of the robuster literature of Fielding and Scott.—London World.

Kairwanese Women.

The features of the Kairwanese women are pure, but without character—a sort of general regularity uninteresting in itself, and which does not appeal to the fancy. One seeks in vain in their almost classic faces something to reveal the individual, something of the deeper experience of life which discloses itself in the harassed faces of Northern races. Their large eyes, surrounded by a thick dark circle, have the fixed placidity of expression of the animal. They put white cosmetics without stint on their breasts, color their lips with carmine, and the tips of their fingers with henna. All these pungent seasoning well become their physiognomies, sometimes proud, sometimes gloomy, and the picturesque frame which surrounds them.

Thus adorned, they like to remain motionless; one would take them for Hindoo idols, with their silk garments ornamented with gold, their bare legs and arms the color of amber encircled by old and heavy jewelry of silver.

Poor daughters of a condemned race, plunged in a profound stupor, their life passes in household work and the manufacture of carpets and woolen stuffs. Sometimes they practice singing while playing the tabor and the darbouca, or move nonchalantly through some measures of the dance. Woman of means—the happiest of them—interrupt their employment by long naps. This is their greatest pleasure, their greatest luxury—to sleep. Their favorite distraction in summer is to mount for a few moments in the evening to their terraces and exchange greetings with each other and some brief gossip. They must return only the more depressed to that cloister-like solitude which characterizes all Arab dwellings, and where alone is revealed all the jealous suspicion, all the ferocious surveillance of Mussulman life. Parents do not always wait till their daughters are marriageable to sell them, after a disputed bargain, to an old or a young man. The price of the woman varies from 100 francs to 500 or 600. This great difference comes from the fact that the future husband pays according to the importance of his wife's family, but the degree of beauty never enters into consideration, since the couple are supposed to see each for the first time on their wedding day. Marriage, far from emancipating women, only changes their opinion. The tyranny of the husband is even harsher that that in the family, where the father loves his daughter, since his caprice is absolute law. The man always eats alone; the woman is not admitted to the honor of sharing his meal; she serves, standing respectfully before him.

Teaching Health to the Young.

We have never found the slightest difficulty in obtaining evidence, after strict examination, that lads and lasses may learn very thoroughly as much of the structure of the body and as much knowledge of its functions and hygienic requirements as fits them for understanding clearly and intelligently such vital matters as the nature of breathing, the nature of foods and digestion, the circulation of the blood, the work of the muscles, etc. Boys and girls are naturally interested in science; and they are generally delighted with the study of the nature of their own bodies, and can learn more of the laws of health in a year at a tender age, if properly taught, than in ten years after they are old, and their habits fixed and not easily changed.

Mr. John Clark, of Millbridge, Ont., declares it can, and that Hagyard's Yellow Oil is the remedy that cured him. It is also a specific for all inflamation and pain 31-2i whom everybody knows as the successful manager of the Largest Hotel Enterprises

of America, says that while a passenger from New York on board a ship going around Cape Horn, in the early days of emigration to California, he learned that one of the officers of the vessel had cured himself, during the voyage, of an obstinate disease by the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Since then Mr. LELAND has recommended AYER'S SARSAPARILLA in many similar cases, and he has never yet heard of its failure to effect a radical cure.

Some years ago one of Mr. LELAND'S farm laborers bruised his leg. Owing to the bad state of his blood, an ugly scrofulous swelling or lump appeared on the injured limb. Horrible itching of the skin, with burning and darting pains through the lump, made life almost intolerable. The leg became enormously enlarged, and running ulcers formed, discharging great quantities of extremely offensive matter. No treatment was of any avail until the man, by Mr. LELAND'S direction, was supplied with AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, which allayed the pain and irritation, healed the sores, removed the swelling, and completely restored the limb to use.

Mr. LELAND has personally used

for Rheumatism, with entire success; and, after careful observation, declares that, in his belief, there is no medicine in the world equal to it for the cure of Liver Disorders, Gout, the effects of high Living, Salt Rheum, Sores, Eruptions, and all the various forms of blood diseases.

We have Mr. LELAND'S permission to invite all who may desire further evidence in regard to the extraordinary curative powers of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA to see him personally either at his mammoth Ocean Hotel, Long Branch, or at the popular Leland Hotel, Broadway, 26th and 29th Streets, New York.

Mr. LELAND'S extensive knowledge of the good done by this unequalled eradicator of blood poisons enables him to give inquirers much valuable information.

PETERBOROUGH, AUGUST 7, 1884.

Honoring Mr. Mowat.

If any man in Ontario was ever worthy of a public recognition of the services rendered the Province, that man is Hon. Mr. Mowat, who returns successful from his visit to England, where he has put the cope stone to a monument to his honor as a champion of Ontario's rights, that will be "more enduring than brass." Throughout the whole of the matter of the disputed north-west boundaries he has exhibited the most unflagging energy, the most clear-sighted cleverness, the most intelligent vigilance, and the most unwearied persistence in defence and in maintenance of the territorial rights of this Province. He has had fightings without and foes within. He has had to contend with one of the most unscrupulous and cunning politicians ever known in Canada; he has had traitors in this Province to guard against, and yet he has not, for one moment, lost faith in the justness of his cause, or abated one jot of energetic action. The ability, honesty and success with which he has managed the affairs and conducted the Government of this Province during the past twelve years have earned him the gratitude of Ontario, and the occasion of his latest triumph is a most fitting opportunity, not only to recognize that triumph, but to also recognise the long and unselfish services he has performed for the past dozen years in our behalf. Hon. Mr. Mowat will return home about the middle of September, and his public reception will be tendered on September 16th. This will consist of a reception by delegation at Niagara, and procession to Queen's Park, Toronto, on his arrival in the city, when a general address will be presented and opportunities given to present addresses by any Reform associations throughout the country, who may desire to do so. The Reform associations in all parts of the Province will join heartily into the proposed demonstration in Mr. Mowat's honor. It is one thing greatly to Mr. Mowat's credit that he insists that a pecuniary present should form no part of the programme. He has not been seeking the loaves and fishes; he has not worked for hope of reward, but has, with simple and unassuming conscientiousness fulfilled the duties of his high trust because they were duties. Hope of pecuniary reward has never animated him. It is well-known that he would make much more money by his profession than his salary as a minister brings him, and, that he has made sacrifices of this nature for the benefit of his native Province, is another reason why recognition of his valuable services should be made. Reformers in every riding are taking an interest in the proposed demonstration, and we are sure that East and West Peterborough will not be wanting on the occasion.

Impertinent Intermeddling.

Our Conservative contemporaries, being so completely crushed by the decision in the boundary matter and by the defeat of the bribery brigade in Muskoka, have nothing of any account to "get off" except a little billious abuse, and they turn their attention to the affairs of the Reform party, with a view of re-constructing it. They are trying to make the public believe that Hon. Mr. Mowat is to supplant Hon. Mr. Blake as leader of the Dominion Opposition. But the Reform party is perfectly content; Mr. Blake is doing well in his present position. Though he may seem to make slow progress, it is to be borne in mind that the progress of the triumph of the Gospel over the powers of darkness is so slow as to sometimes discourage the most zealous evangelists; but it will come. So Mr. Blake may seem to be making slow way against the hydra-headed corruption that lurks in high places at Ottawa, yet his progress is sure. The end is coming faster than surface signs would indicate. And everybody knows the reason for anxiety expressed by the Tories in reference to Mr. Mowat. They have been for a dozen years, by fair means or foul—principally foul—trying to make him go; if bullying or abuse fail, then flattery is tried. The very fact of the Tories trying to make Mr. Blake and Mr. Mowat change places is a reason, apart from other and more potent ones, why they should continue to hold their present relations to the Reform party, and to the Tory party, too.

Retribution.

Throughout the whole of the Boundary business, since his entering upon his last lease of power, Sir John Macdonald has shown himself the uncompromising enemy of Ontario. He could not forget that Ontario, with its pronounced adhesion to liberalism, was a decided bar in the way of the promotion of his political schemes. In compliance with the demand of his French supporters, behind our their jealousy of this province, he refused to give legislative sanction to make the award of the arbitrators legally, as has been shown by the decision of the Privy Council, it was morally binding. This failing to fill the measure of his vindictiveness, he sought to further complicate the situation by introducing Manitoba as a further disturbing element in complicating the boundary controversy. On the 13th of March, 1881, an act was passed, placing the eastern boundary of Manitoba, 250 miles farther east, to include the territory assigned Ontario by the arbitrators. But in this he overreached himself, for it opened the way for Mr. Mowat to make, in default of the Dominion Parliament ratifying the award, reference of the matter to the Privy Council, on conditions that he had always insisted on. It is fresh in memory, Hon. Mr. Mowat, by sturdily asserting our rights in the North-western portion of this province, came into conflict with the claims of Manitoba, to the territory unjustly ceded to that province by Sir John; how from the complications arising out of that province's claim to Ontario territory, outgrew the negotiations that resulted in a reference of the questions at issue to the Privy council, on conditions that Mr. Mowat had always contended for—control of the territory in dispute in the meantime. Sir John assented to this arrangement, but afterwards backed out of it in his characteristic manner. In spite of this, however, the case has been submitted to the Privy Council, and decided in favor of Ontario, in face of all Sir John's efforts to prevent this province from securing her territorial rights. Thus the very means adopted by the wily enemy of Ontario to outrage her rights, have been contributory to securing her their just recognition by a tribunal from which there is no appeal. "The engineer"—Sir John—"hoist with his own petar."

A Lamentable Lack of Go.

In some respects there is a lamentable lack of go, in some of the public men of Peterborough. In respect of new and suitable grounds for Exhibition purposes, the West riding Agricultural Society seem to have let their chances like sunbeams pass them by. When the Driving Park Association leased their present premises, they made the society an offer, which would appear to have been an advantageous one. This was a lease of the eastern portion of the grounds, on the conditions of the payment of a proportionate share of the rent with a free use of the track for exhibition purposes. With the resources of the two bodies conjoined, with an eligible situation, it seems that arrangements could have been made by which respectable exhibition grounds could have been secured on exceedingly reasonable terms, and the annual exhibitions of the Society raised from the low and moribund condition that has for some time characterised them. But the offer of the Driving Park Association was declined, and the society of a rich riding, like west Peterborough, has practically not where to lay its head. If the town authorities, who are not acting, either, with any remarkable amount of "go," carry out the intention of converting the "old burial grounds" into a park, the Agricultural Society will be upon the streets, or if they do secure premises, it will be on more expensive terms than those offered by the Driving Park Association.

There is no reason why, with the expenditure of a little money, and the exertion of a little enterprise, Peterborough might not be the locale of a flourishing Central Exhibition, such as St. Thomas, Guelph, London, or Kingston possess; one to which the counties, comprising the Midland District, might be made tributary. In St. Thomas, the Southern Counties Fair was organized by business citizens, and independently of the dividends derived from the stock, an immense impetus was given the trade of the town, by the presence during exhibition week, of thousands of visitors. Every class of the community reaped a substantial advantage. This little city presents no better facilities than Peterborough, for successfully carrying out the idea of a Central Exhibition. It only needs a few live men at the bottom of such an enterprise, to ensure its success, for the natural conditions already exist. We are the centre of a grand group of counties, the most populous and commercially important town. In the present Driving Park premises, there is the nucleus of a most advantageous site. The property adjoining the Park to the south, can, we are assured, be leased on reasonable terms; this plot lying, as it does at the foot of George street, and surrounded on its four sides by streets, would make as fine grounds as any in Canada. The addition would also admit of a mile track being made, and with the easy access by rail, there is no reason why Peterborough should not enjoy, in addition to a superb annual Central Exhibition, an annual race meeting, which would attract the best horses in the country. In the maintainance of a first class Central Exhibition and Driving Park, there is a possibility of both pleasure and profit, by the exercise of only enterprise and energy, and the expenditure of a moderate amount of money. Any one that doubts the certainty of a direct money dividend, apart from the incidental assistance to trade, in a Central Exhibition, should communicate with the proper authorities of the go-ahead places that have such in successful operation.

Peterborough, with its business enterprise, with its practical status of a city, as shown by its water works, its electric light system, its fine business streets, (generally peculiar only to cities); with its magnificent environment of rich agricultural country, with its focus of a great system of railways,—is certainly worthy of something better than a weakly, low-spirited exhibition, that can hardly compete in attractiveness, extent and interest, with a little township show.

The Tory journals strive to maintain that the award of the arbitrators was illegal. If that be so, it was only so, because, Sir John broke the formal engagement of the government of Canada, by refusing to pass confirmatory legislation. Any bill of Parliament is illegal in the same sense, till the sanction of the Governor-general makes it law. But their facts being against the traitors to Ontario's interests, they can only quibble and wriggle in this manner.

The Cholera Scourge.

The cholera scourge, of which we have heard so much lately, does not yet seem to have quite exhausted its strength. In Marseilles, the improvement chronicled a few days ago has been followed by a somewhat alarming reaction and many sudden deaths. This phase of the epidemic is no doubt largely due to the prevalence of extreme heat, accompanied by heavy fogs. The cities in the South of France, where the disease is most prevalent, are noted for their extremely dirty and squalid character, and for their utter neglect of all sanitary precautions. A correspondent recently drew attention to the horrible condition of the slums in Toulon and Marseilles. From the description given, one can readily imagine they are veritable hotbeds of disease. The inhabitants of Toulon have testified to their conviction of the presence of the dreaded Asiatic cholera by flying, in a multitude from the pest-ridden city. Out of 69,000 tax-paying residents, it was computed that in one week no less than forty thousand had left the town. A wild panic seemed to have seized rich and poor; all, in fact, who should have sought to combat the disease by reasonable means. Assuredly, fear is the most effective ally of any epidemic. There is an Oriental legend which has appeared in various forms, and which puts this in very forcible terms. The demon of cholera, encountered on his deadly route by a pilgrim, promises to slay only twenty thousand. Ninety thousand perish, and the demon is naturally accused of breaking his pledged word. "No," he said, "I killed but twenty thousand; fear slew the remainder."

Fear, however, is a very different thing from reasonable precaution. This dreadful pest has certainly established itself for the time being on European soil, and we, in this country, should carefully consider how we are to keep the enemy away.

Prevention is better than cure. We do not imagine there is any great cause for alarm here, with reasonable and immediate precautions. Such steps have been taken already by the governments of the United States and and Canada, as will, we hope, be effectual in excluding this terrible disease. There are, of course, two methods which may be employed to keep the cholera away—that of quarantine and that of individual isolation.

We may, if we choose, admit none who cross the Atlantic from infected districts, without keeping them under surveillance for a time sufficiently long to exclude infection. Or we may carefully examine such immigrants with a view to the detection of actual cases of disease, and treat such cases separately when discovered.

The former method would, of course, occasion much interruption and inconvenience to trade and commerce, and experience has proved that it is not effective, but, on the contrary, somewhat injurious. When disease exists it only increases its intensity and accumulates it in larger quantities under peculiar insanitary conditions This was abundantly manifested in Egypt a year ago. The plan, we know, is constantly followed on the continent of Europe, and is a perpetual subject of complaint and invective on the part of travellers and tourists.

A better method certainly is individual isolation. Our sanitary laws warrant an inspection of all suspected vessels, and the transference of infectious patients to special hospitals. These laws will be carefully and rigidly enforced.

Quarantine precautions of a very stringent character will be observed at all our Atlantic ports, under the authority of the Department of Agriculture. All infected individuals will be detained. Passengers for United States ports are to be examined before embarking, and immediately on their arrival they will be further inspected.

These rules will, if rigidly enforced, keep the enemy from our doors. And if we make our dwellings sweet, our streets clean and our water pure, and be careful about abuses in eating and drinking, especially in the use of alcoholic liquors, the danger of infection will be very materially reduced. Should the terrible news cause our people to be more active in making their surroundings clean and tidy, and in setting everything in order, the cry that the cholera is coming will not have been uttered in vain.

It is very satisfactory to notice that, owing to the strides civilized countries have made in sanitary reform, the death-rate from attacks of cholera has been steadily diminishing. In England, in 1849, it was 60 for every 10,000 inhabitants; in 1854 it was 21, and in 1866 it was only 13. This conclusively proves that sanitary reform has accomplished great things for the human race, but all will admit much still remains to be done.

Editorial Notes.

Hon. D. L. Macpherson has been knighted at last, and the Mail now speaks of him as Sir David. Sir Christopher Bunting, Sir John Shields and Baron Big Push have not received their parchments yet.

Mr. George Tait Blackstock, barrister, of Toronto, has been selected to contest the riding of Lennox for the seat in the local Legislature made vacant by the death of the late member, Mr. Roe. Seeing that Mr. Blackstock has no more interest in Lennox than in Central Africa, it is difficult to determine on what grounds he bases his claim to be selected as its representative.

"It is not all gold that glitters," is a fact which comes home to many people with startling reality. Only two short years ago ex-Governor Cauchon, of Manitoba, was supposed to be a millionaire. "His fortunes," says the Dundas Banner, "went up with the boom, and he built some magnificent properties in the Prairie City. But now, he is said to be a poor pauseless invalid, living on sufferance in an upper flat in a building which is to be sold under mortgage in September, when he will become a homeless wanderer unless some of his friends, if he has any left, come to his assistance."

Mr. Charlebois having declared last week that he had only made a profit of $2,000 to $3,000 on his contract for getting up the temporary Parliament House at Quebec, Mr. Mercer produced vouchers before Commissioners from Mr. Charlebois' own furnishers, showing for what he paid them only $4,472 he had charged the Province and had been paid $14,518, his profits on some articles and work being represented by ten times their cost to himself. Political brigandage on a more outrageous scale was probably never countenanced by any Government before.

There are fresh rumours abroad about contemplated changes in the Dominion Government. It is said that the Hon. Peter Mitchell is again an applicant for the portfolio of Minister of Marine and Fisheries, but it is not likely Peter will get it. He is too open-mouthed and too much of a free-lance in Parliament to suit Sir John. The talk now is if McLelan does resign that position he will be made Minister of Railways, Mr. Daly would take Costigan's place as Minister of Inland Revenue, Mr. T. White would succeed Sir Leonard Tilley, and Mr. McCarthy be made Minister of Justice in room of Sir Alexander Campbell.

The National Policy party is not noted for consistency in living up to its declared policy of Canada for the Canadians. One day the Government is the offender by importing scows and dredges from the Yankees; the next a representative member of the wonderful party shows his hypocrisy. Mr. B. Rosamond, Mayor of Almonte, who, as candidate in the N. P. interest at the last election, preached this doctrine ad nauseam, has sinned against the cardinal canon of his party by ordering from the States a fire engine, when a Canadian one could be bought as cheaply and as good, if not better.

The Orillia News Letter gives some wild advice to the Conservative party. It points out that having been defeated on all present issues, and all hope of reaching power, being in the intangible future, the party should turn its attention to reducing the sessional indemnity. Our contemporary must be jesting; why, all the Tory party has been struggling for for a dozen years, is the spoils that they manage to make attach to the possession of office; and to ask them to forego the slight taste they enjoy, in the shape of a sessional allowance, is sheer cruelty—is eliminating the only drop of comfort in their bitter cup.

Mr. Norquay, Premier of Manitoba, is likely to let his Province into a nice little bill of costs for his having lent himself as the tool of Sir John to the endeavour to rob Ontario of her territory. His raid on Rat Portage will cost the significant sum of "another $10,000," and Mr. Miller's costs in his journey to England to fight Mr. Mowat before the Privy Council will be another tidy sum for Manitoba to pay. And all in another man's quarrel, for at the best—had she won her case—Manitoba gains nothing, for the Dominion controls the public lands of the Prairie Province. Happy is the Province that has a premier like Mr. Mowat, who will manfully stand up for its rights, and not be dragged through the mire of party schemes at the behest of Sir John Macdonald.

The assurance of Mr. J. Travis, a leading New Brunswick lawyer, in issuing a work on "Constitutional Law," is astounding. With such an eminent constitutional lawyer as Sir John Macdonald in existence, it is the height of—say impudence—for any one else to aspire to knowing anything about constitutional law. Two suns in one sky are a little too much. True, the Imperial Privy Council has almost invariably been weak enough to hold a contrary opinion to Sir John; but, that's nothing. Sir John has only to shake his ambrosial curls, give a Joviau nod or two to his worshipping admirers, look wise, and everything is explained—the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is a batch of wooden-headed fogies, and Sir John is the only infallible constitutional lawyer living. Parenthetically, however, Sir John must have acquired his reputation in this respect, on the lucus a non lucendo principle.

LAKEFIELD.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Mr. R. Strickland, reeve, has arranged with Mr. White, Traffic Agent, Midland Railway, for a special train from Peterborough every Saturday evening, commencing this week. The train will return to Peterborough about eight o'clock.

A large Sunday school picnic, under the auspices of the C. M. Church, Millbrook, paid our village a visit on Tuesday, the 29th. July. The low water disappointed them, so far as boating was concerned, but we believe they had a pleasant day otherwise.

On the day of the above picnic, a horse driven by Mrs. W. J. Moore, took fright at a locomotive, while crossing the railway track, and became unmanageable; her buggy striking a carriage, in which were Miss Crickmore, Miss Nichols and Dr. Caldwell; her buggy was completely turned upside down, and the horse thrown, but Mrs. Moore escaped unhurt, keeping remarkably cool. Matters were soon set to rights, and no damage done.

Council meets on Monday evening next.

HAVELOCK.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Mr. George Learmouth, of Asphodel, has purchased 100 acres opposite Havelock station, on the O. & Q., from Mr. D. Anderson, and will shortly offer it for sale in village lots.

Mr. I. J. Metcalf, of Bailliebero, will preach for the Rev. A. E. de St. Dalmas, of Smith, next Sunday. The services will be as follows: In the morning, in the Line Baptist Church, in the afternoon, at Selwyn, and in the evening, at Lakefield.

THE N. P. AND THE FARMERS.

Whatever the N. P. may have done for particular classes, it has certainly done very little for the farmer. It has not appreciably increased his market, certainly nothing like the same extent to which it has raised the prices on such important goods as he requires. The places that have benefited have been the larger towns and cities. The tendency of manufacturing industry of late has been strongly in the direction of centralization. Many establishments which formerly contributed to the prosperity of the smaller villages scattered through the country, have been concentrated in the cities, and the new industries to which the tariff has given birth, are nearly all in the large centres. So far the great bulk of the farmers are rather worse off in the matter of a home market, than before.—Toronto News.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Regular Meeting.

Collegiate Institute—The Teaching Staff Appointments Made Messrs. McKee and Earl Re-instated.

The regular monthly meeting of the School Board was held on Tuesday evening. There were present,—Messrs. Stevenson, chairman, Kendry, Rutherford, Wrighton, Sproule, Stratton, Cox, Millar, Denne, Weir, Errett, Dumble and Sawers.

After routine,

COMMUNICATIONS

were read,

From Dr. Tassie, accepting the appointment of Principal of the Peterborough Collegiate Institute.

From Barton Earl, admitting his drinking habits, and stating that, whether he was re-appointed by the Board or not, he had decided, by God's help, to overcome a habit which could only lead to shame.

Communications from Messrs. Long and Horning, accepting their appointments, were received, and accounts for travelling expenses of Messrs. Robertson and Odlum, amounting to $12 and $20 respectively, with the travelling expenses of Dr. Tassie, were ordered to be paid.

COMMITTEE ON APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. Dumble, chairman, presented the report of the Committee on Appointments, as follows:—

The Committee on Appointments beg leave to report:

That the better to enable them to select a staff of teachers from amongst the forty applicants, it was thought prudent to request Dr. Tassie to attend before the Committee at the expense of the Board. This he did, and your Committee, on his advice, now recommend to the Board that Mr. Horning be appointed Mathematical Master, and Mr. Long, Modern Language Master, at salaries of $900 a year, respectively.

Your Committee, at the request of Dr. Tassie, recommend that a teacher be appointed for the primary department of the High School, at a salary of $ a year.

Respecting the appointment of an English master, and a teacher for the primary department, your Committee have not been able to agree upon any one whom to recommend.

D. W. DUMBLE.

Mr. Dumble moved, seconded by Mr. Stratton, that the report be adopted.

Mr. Rutherford moved in amendment that the clause of the report, referring to the appointment of a teacher for the preparatory department be struck out.

Mr. Rutherford said the Board had adopted the policy of having only four teachers, and it was inconsistent to adopt a report recommending five.

Mr. Dumble explained that the recommendation had been adopted by the full Board, as Committee on Appointments, at the suggestion of the Principal.

Mr. Cox said Mr. Rutherford was consistent in his opposition to five teachers. He (Mr. Cox) had always favored five teachers, or any number requisite for maintenance of the effectiveness of the school.

The report was adopted on a division; Messrs. Kendry and Rutherford only voting nay, the other members of the Board voting yea.

Mr. Cox moved, seconded by Mr. Stratton, that the blank in the report be filled in with $900, as salary of the teacher for the preparatory department.

Mr. Dumble said applications had been received from good teachers and honor graduates for the department, and he thought there would be no difficulty in filling the position at $900 with a first-class teacher.

Mr. Denne defended five teachers being appointed on the staff. The Principal had practically recommended five teachers, and he would support his recommendation.

Mr. Dumble pointed out that several graduates had offered to teach for salaries of from $400 to $700.

Mr. Errett moved in amendment, seconded by Mr. Sawers, that the salary be not fixed, till the appointment be made. The amendment was carried on the following division.

YEAS—Messrs. Burnham, Errett, Weir, Denne, Sawers, Wrighton, Kendry.

NAYS—Messrs. Dumble, Miller, Cox, Stratton and Rutherford.

ENGLISH MASTER.

Mr. Sproule moved, seconded by Mr. Sawers, that Mr. Earl be appointed English Master in the Collegiate Institute.

The Chairman stated that the Principal had emphasized the importance of Mr. Burt being on the staff.

Mr. Millar added that Mr. Burt had the best recommendations of any of the applicants.

Mr. Weir advocated Mr. McKee's re-appointment. He was a good teacher and a man of a family, and since there was nothing urged against him he should not be dismissed.

Mr. Dumble pointed out, in reply to Mr. Weir, that Mr. McKee was not being dismissed. There had been a clean sweep made of the staff—all the teachers discharged—and Mr. McKee came up as any other applicant. Members of the Board were making appeals to sympathy on behalf of Mr. McKee and Mr. Earl. In Mr. Campbell's case there had been no particular display of sympathy, he—with a family, too, dependent on him—was deliberately dismissed. After the general dismissal of the staff of the Institute, Mr. Campbell had recognized in the appointment of Dr. Tassie as Principal (who was to take classics) his final dismissal, without a chance, as the other teachers had, of re-engagement. Yet he had accepted the situation manfully. He did not creep and cringe for re-appointment; he did not send deputations of private citizens to button-hole members of the—

Mr. Kendry—Who did do it?

Mr. Dumble said that Mr. McKee had done so. The Board knew of the difficulties and troubles that had existed in the Collegiate Institute for some time past, and it was all the work of two teachers, Mr. McKee and Mr. Earl. They had been guilty of tale-bearing and fomenting disturbances. They had slandered their fellow-teachers, and even stooped to falsehood to accomplish their evil purposes. By their actions these two teachers had set the Board by the ears, and created all the trouble, difficulty, hard feeling and annoyance, which was apparently not yet at an end. Mr. McKee had slandered teachers, even circulating the statement that Mr. Campbell could not teach classics without a translation. He was a chronic element of disturbance. He had always been causing trouble. He had raised trouble in Mr. Dickson's time, and had worried that gentleman into the grave. Mr. McKee's selfishness and greed suggested that by reducing the staff of teachers there would be higher salaries for those that remained, and he intrigued for Miss Paxton's discharge, and he got his salary raised as he had schemed for. As time went on he did not change, for he had originated the late troubles that had afflicted the school, and had always been a disturbing element in the school, and there was only one remedy left, that was to supply his place—to keep him out of the school, where he had always worked so much mischief. He did not wish to disparage Mr. McKee's teaching abilities, but he (Mr. Dumble) again asserted that Mr. McKee had always been a disturbing element, and for that reason he opposed his appointment. From the teachers the element of discord had crept into the Board, feeling had been so strongly aroused that a split had been brought into existence, and, as a result, personal favorites were sought to be appointed on personal grounds. Members of the Board well knew that Mr. McKee had been insubordinate and had point blank refused to "line" the pupils for the Principal.

A voice—So did Mr. Campbell.

But, continued Mr. Dumble, Mr. Campbell was the chief teacher on the staff, and he "lined" the boys all winter. Mr. McKee even went so far as to threaten the late Principal that if he did not arrange the classes to suit him (Mr. McKee) the latter's friends on the Board would secure the Principal's dismissal. Mr. McKee might have good teaching abilities; but he did not devote his time to teaching, but to wire-pulling. He (Mr. Dumble) wanted a staff that would be above such considerations. He did not want the place filled by a meddler, a busy-body and a mischief-maker. He did not want appointed, either, a teacher who would come drunk to the school, who would use tobacco in his classes and leave his work to spit it out at the window. He wanted the standing of the school raised, and he urged the Board to throw aside their personal and other feeling and select the best men—to appoint no man, reject no man, because of his church or creed. Members of the Board had been canvassed for Dr. Tassie as against Mr. Campbell, on the grounds that, by so doing, Mr. Campbell would be dismissed. Mr. McKee had gone so far as to say that if Mr. Campbell were dismissed it would save $1,000, whereas it would do nothing of the kind, for, at the present time, the position of the opponents of Mr. Campbell is, that they have worked to supplant him with a teacher at a salary higher by $200. The time was come to make a wise selection and for the members to vote for the best interests of the school. He was not afraid to vote according to his convictions. He wished to give Dr. Tassie a chance to work up the school, and not to hamper him by giving him assistants who would try to "run" him as they had tried to "run" the late Principal, and destroy the school. He had, he admitted, spoken plainly, but he had only given expression to what had been in the minds of members of the Board, and he felt it his duty to show why, in the interest of the school, the two names proposed should not be entertained.

Mr. Sproule said that Mr. O'Connor was a good man, and would have been a success had it not been for the causes referred to by Mr. Dumble.

Mr. Cox also said that Mr. Earle and Mr. McKee had been disturbing elements for the last two or three years, and, in view of the interests of the school he was willing to endorse what Mr. Dumble had said.

Mr. Sproule said that before Dr. Tassie was selected, he was solicited to vote for him to displace Mr. Campbell.

Mr. Dumble said he had no ill feeling against Mr. Earl, but he considered the interests of the hundreds of children, before those of any applicant.

Mr. Millar moved in amendment, seconded by Mr. Rutherford, that Mr. Burt's name be substituted for that of Mr. Earl.

Mr. Rutherford said he seconded the motion in compliance with the advice of Dr. Tassie, who asserted, that of all the teachers applying, Mr. Burt was the best.

Mr. Kendry here moved that Mr. Earl be appointed English master, and Mr. McKee, master for the preparatory department.

Mr. Stratton raised a point of order; the chairman sustained it, and the amendment was dropped.

Mr. Rutherford, continuing, said that if the members were consistent, they would support Dr. Tassie's efforts to make the school efficient by appointing the teachers he recommended.

Mr. Millar said he had not so far seen anything but wrangling in connection with the board and the staff, and he advocated an entirely new staff.

The amendment being put was lost, and the original motion carried on the following division.

YEAS—Messrs. Burnham, Errett, Denne, Weir, Sproule, Sawers, Wrighton and Kendry.

NAYS—Messrs. Dumble, Millar, Cox, Stratton and Rutherford.

Mr. Sproule moved, seconded by Mr. Stratton, that Mr. Earl's salary be fixed at $900 per year.

Mr. Dumble moved in amendment that the salary be fixed at $800 per year.

Mr. Cox said that if Mr. Earl had been receiving $900, and was thought worthy of re-appointment, the salary should remain at $900, for which he would vote.

The motion was carried on this division.

YEAS—Messrs. Sproule, Sawers, Kendry, Stratton, Cox, Millar, Weir and Errett.

NAYS—Messrs. Dumble, Burnham, Denne, Wrighton and Rutherford.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. Errett moved, seconded by Mr. Weir, that the position of teacher for the preparatory department be filled by the appointment of Mr. McKee.

Mr. Stratton moved in amendment, seconded by Mr. Sproule, that a lady teacher be appointed for the position.

Mr. Dumble said it was desirable that we should have a lady teacher in the school, a concession the public demanded; Dr. Tassie also was in favor of it.

The amendment was lost and the original motion carried on a division.

Mr. Cox said he had felt it was his duty to the school and to the people, to vote for a clean sweep, and give the school a new staff; He hoped that the members who had voted to-night, would enjoy their victory; they might rejoice that they had turned out a Methodist, as they had done. He accused members of the board of conducting a crusade against Methodist teachers.

Mr. Stratton said there had been explanations of the manner in which members had voted. He had voted for a clean sweep of the old staff, and in this way he had voted against Messrs. Earl and McKee, without any ill feeling against them.

Mr. Kendry, moved, seconded by Mr. Weir, that Mr. McKee's salary be $700.

Mr. Dumble moved in amendment, seconded by Mr. Stratton, that the figure be $800.

The motion was adopted fixing the salary at $700.

The board adjourned.

PETERBOROUGH CHEESE BOARD.

At the fortnightly meeting of the Board, held in the Board Rooms, on Tuesday, there were twenty factories represented by 2,210 boxes. The buyers were Messrs. Claxton and Wright, of Peterborough; Brower, Belleville; and Flavelle, Lindsay. Cable quotations were 51 shillings, and firm at that, and that, perhaps, accounts for so many factories holding against what might be considered fair prices. Of the cheese sold, 567 boxes, belonging to Keene, Warminster, Myrtle and Lily Lake, were sold at 10¾ cents, 198 boxes (South Dummer) at 10¾, and 50 boxes (Lakehurst) at 9¾. The remaining factories refused a bid of 9¾. Victoria county tale smen refused 9¾, offered by Mr. Flavelle.

The following list comprises the cheese offered by the factories represented:

Cricket Victory.

On Tuesday a team of the Peterborough Cricket Club, which however, comprised only nine men of the first eleven, played a match with Uxbridge on the latters' ground. One innings only was played, the home team winning by 43 runs. At the end of the first innings, an unpleasantness arose and Peterborough declined to continue the game and left the field.

Baptist Sunday School Picnic.

This Sunday School will hold its annual excursion and picnic on Friday, August 8th. The steamer Golden Eye will convey the party to Campbellstown, leaving town at eight o'clock sharp; and leave on the return at six o'clock. Tickets, (to be had at the wharf): adults, 40 cents, children of the school, 10 cents, other children 20 cents. Hot water supplied, and every arrangement made for the pleasure of the party.

Fine Art Exhibition.

The exhibition of fine arts, pictures, articles of vertu, natural history specimens, curiosities, rare books and engravings, etc., etc., which opened in the Post Office on Wednesday, is a credit to the Y. M. C. A. The exhibition comprises a hundred superior oil paintings, water colors, tint pictures, etchings and engravings. All the pictures are of great merit, and they will stand the closest criticism, and challange the warmest admiration. The committee deserve great credit for getting so admirable a collection together every article of which is of worth, nothing being placed for the mere sake of filling up. This fine exhibition, which is well worth a visit, will be open afternoons and evenings, till Saturday. Admission: afternoon, 10cts, evening, when music will be provided, 15 cts. The visitor will not only receive full value for his money, but will have the pleasure of aiding the funds of a noble and unselfish Christian enterprise.

Cricket.

On Friday last a "we-met-by-chance" team of the Peterborough Cricket Club, went down to Campbellford to have an afternoon's sport with willow and rawhide. Only three of the first eleven was on the visiting team. Our boys played a very steady game, the total score in each innings, being 84, for which W. A. Stratton alone supplied double figures—18 and 24, respectively in the two innings. Below is the score, showing that Campbellford won by three stumps:

ERICA'S SACRIFICE.

A QUESTION OF

Forgiveness or Dishonor.

CHAPTER I.

TAKING UP THE LIFE-BURDEN.

"Erica, I say—Erica! Where is she?"

A sharp and clear came the voice from the [illegible] in a p[illegible] cottage of [illegible] Bay, and a little white head was put out, and drew aside the curtain, and the large eyes, so bright still, peered out into the half-darkened room.

A woman came in quickly from an inner apartment, and stepped up to the bed.

"Miss Erica's just gone to take a bit o' rest, mistress," she said, firmly but gently, putting the hand that clutched hers back under the bed covering.—"What d'you want her for?"

"I am going soon—very soon," the clear voice answered, but weaker was the tone. "I must see her—must! Do you hear, Joan? Go, bring her and leave us."

She sank back as if exhausted, but her eyes wandered round the room yet.

"Arnold, my best-beloved," she muttered. "Yes, for thee, for thy salvation, she is strong."

"Mr. Arnold ain't here, mistress," said the attendant. "He's been sent for."

"Yes, yes, I know," said her mistress restlessly. "Go, call Erica."

"Blessed lamb!" muttered the nurse as she left the bedside, "and she only just asleep."

She passed back into the inner chamber, where a light was flickering in the fresh, damp sea breeze that blew in at the open casement, carrying with it the smell of brine and seaweed.

It lifted, too, and toyed with lightly, the straying rings of chestnut hair lying on that young girl's brow—quite a young girl—a child, indeed, almost, for she seemed scarcely more than sixteen; slender of make, exquisitely graceful in the perfect abandon and repose of her attitude as she lay, breathing softly and quietly; yet even in sleep there lay on the broad, grave brow an anxious, sorrowful shade that told of nights of watching, of constant grief pressing on mind and body.

"Poor lassie!" [illegible] Joan, looking down on her kindly. "It do seem a shame to waken her, but I must."

But either Erica was scarcely asleep, or even in sleep she was ever on the qui vive, for she opened her eyes—great heavily-fringed dark eyes—suddenly, and started up, pushing the hair from her forehead.

"What is it, Joan?" she said under her breath. "Mother——"

"She wants you, dear," said the nurse; "she called a while back, and seems in a fidget-like for you, and keeps on about Mr. Arnold."

"I'll go."

The girl slipped off the couch—a tall slim figure clad in loose white dressing-robe—and glided silently into the next room, closing the door of communication, and came round to the bedside, bending tenderly over the form lying there.

"You wanted me, dear mother," she said, gently. "I am here."

"Ah, you are here; you are my strong Erica," the mother said, and a sigh of satisfaction escaped her. "Kneel down, child, and listen to me."

Wondering a little, and fearing that her mind was wandering, Erica knelt beside the bed, holding in her warm and firm clasp the clammy hand which already lay heavy in hers.

"I am clear in my mind, Erica," Mrs. Vernon spoke collectedly and solemnly, and a strange awe crept over the girl as she listened. "I am very near my death, and my mind knows no rest for the foreboding that is on my spirit for Arnold's sake. Though he is not my son, I have loved him—aye, I do love him with a strength that shall endure beyond the grave, for his mother, my darling Mabel, put him into my arms when she died, and bade me love him as my own. I have done that—aye, more than I have loved you, my poor child, who are my own flesh and blood. He needed it more—he needed it more! Arnold is weak and wayward," the dying woman went on, "you are strong and steadfast sufficient for yourself, sufficient to guide and protect. Erica, you love me?" she said suddenly, half-raising herself and tightening her hold of the girl's hand.

"Mother——" The girl stopped, choking down the burning, passionate words that rushed to her lips—could words, indeed, utter the love she bore that mother, who had given her only the second place, after all? "Mother," she said, then, earnestly and softly, "you know how I love you! I would give my very life for your sake!"

Mrs. Vernon turned aside for a brief moment. How cruelly that unselfish love reproached her now. But still, for Arnold's sake, she would prove it.

"You would lay down your life for me," she said slowly. "I believe you, child. I ask you to do that. Hush! hear me. I ask you to give it me in giving it to Arnold. You start back. No, I do not mean as his wife—unless, in future years, you both wish it—but you must be his protector against himself, his guide, his strength. Arnold is wayward and wild. Oh, Erica! my soul quails to think of him left alone to fight for himself in this dread battle-field of temptation, and wrong, and sin. Ward off the consequences of his falls, protect him from all evil, whatever be the cost to you or to others!" She lifted herself now, laying an impassioned clasp on the girl's shoulder, her eyes eager, bright with the fervor of her appeal. "Swear," she said in low passionate tones, "swear by all your hopes of Heaven, by all you value and hold dear—to love and protect Arnold Murray through evil report and good report, in honor and dishonor; to shield him from all danger, however incurred; to do this without counting the cost to yourself or others; to suffer loss, shame, misery in his place! Swear, I say, and then—and then I can die!"

With a strange awe on her spirit, a strange power laying her soul under a spell, from which she yet revolted in the wild terror of her despair, the girl put out her hands, as though by that she could ward off the black cloud closing so densely around her, speaking with smothered words:

"Mother, mother! spare me! Not that. I cannot do all that you would bind me to. Oh, spare me!"

"Child, I am dying! I ask this last proof of the love you say you bear me. My soul is in torture—will you not put me out of pain, that I may die in peace?"

In quick, heavy sobs came the girl's breath, in wild, excited throbs beat her heart. No, it was not much—only an oath made in the presence of death, only something that should tie her with strong cords hand and foot.

Then she lifted her face, and slowly, in measured accents repeated the terrible words that bound her to "shield Arnold Murray from all danger, in honor or dishonor, not counting the cost to herself or others."

And then she kissed the cross she wore, and knelt on still with bowed head and clenched hands; and the woman fell back with a long sigh of relief, and waited quietly for death.

And thus Erica took up her life burden.

CHAPTER II.

"OUR" MISS ERICA.

The sea lay glinting under the pleasant warm rays of an afternoon sun. A bright, clear day in September; the fresh, soft breeze blew inland, curling the tiny waves and cresting them with white as they rippled in gently on to the beach, and over the smooth green rocks that lay farther away beyond the limits of the straggling village of Grayle.

Grayle was not a fa[illegible] place, nor did one see much [illegible] of the [illegible] there. [illegible] the country [illegible] day [illegible] an and the [illegible] to [illegible] but it was a picturesque and d[illegible] place, nevertheless, [illegible] the [illegible] could recruit [illegible] a[illegible] Grayle ha[illegible] flax[illegible] d, so [illegible] groundwork, [illegible] ros[illegible] the [illegible] expectation [illegible] fo[illegible] of fishing-people and farm-laborers, and a few good families lived in those picturesque-looking houses perched up on the cliffs.

There was only one man who owned, and put out from June to October, a couple of boats for the use of the few who cared for the pleasure.

Sometimes he went out with the fishing-boats, sometimes he did a turn at farm-work, and sometimes he was general "handy-man" to the big houses, as they were held to be in this hamlet.

He lived all alone in a little cottage, away high up the cliff that frowned down on Grayle to the northward—a queer, lonely place, perched on a bit of table-land, bleak of all verdure—the only ascent to which was by a rough pathway; but as he liked it, and in his morose sort of way enjoyed his existence there, the folks left him to his taste.

"He gets it for nothing almost," they said, with knowing winks one to the other; "leastways, he built the bit of a place, and pays near nought for the land."

For Nat Poynter had the reputation of being fond of money, and able to drive a good bargain with a neighbor; and yet, withal, a man not without certain generous impulses; for instance, he never could be persuaded to take money from Miss Erica, whom he had known from the time Mrs. Vernon and her daughter had lived at Grayle, nearly eight years ago. He would take her about anywhere in his boat; had taught her to row, and regarded her with a sort of dog-like affection, which was perhaps the softening influence of his rough, hard life. And when Mrs. Vernon died he was sorely grieved because Miss Erica went away to some distant relation in Scotland, and the Grayle House was shut up.

Nearly two years had passed since then, and great was Nat's joy one day, when passing the [illegible] window blinds [illegible] up, the windows [illegible], and various signs of life about the old house, and was told that a gentleman from London had bought it, and was coming down to live there for a time. And the woman from the village, who was having a grand "clean up," told him, with beaming face, that the gentleman was "Miss Erica's" husband.

"Our Miss Erica!" said she, scrubbing vigorously. "Lord, to think of that slip of a thing being married. She as used to be out over the rocks half her time, with her pretty bare feet, a-dreamin' and a-readin' all her life."

And now this particular afternoon Nat Poynter stood on the beach, one foot resting on the side of his boat, which he had redecorated for "Miss Erica."

She had arrived the day before, but had not been down on the beach. Nat thought she might be coming down and want a spell on the sea this fine afternoon; so he had everything ready, and as he stood so waiting, smoking his short pipe, and screwing up his eyes in the sun, he mused on the turn of affairs, and on the appearance of a gentleman whom he fancied to be Miss Erica's husband that he had seen walking down the High-street in the morning—a tall, handsome man, with delicate and haughty features, somewhat stern and grave, the boatman thought.

"Hullos, Nat!" said a voice; and a burly fisherman lounged up with his hands in his pockets.

"Hullos, Jem!" responded Nat, without moving or scarcely looking at his mate. "Heard the news, Jem?"

Nat removed his pipe from his mouth to blow a cloud of smoke from his lips, and tilted his boat backwards and forwards as he spoke.

"News?" Jem was slow and rather apathetic, as countrymen are, but the sound of news stirred him a little. "No; only that Grayle House is took."

"That's the news. Don't you know it's our Miss Erica as is the genneman's wife?"

"No—o!" said Jem, with a protracted dwelling on the "o" that expressed some bewilderment. "Miss Erica!—Lord! Miss Erica! 'Oo's the genneman?"

"Don' know," said Nat. "If it's him I saw to-day, he looks a haristocrat, every hinch of him."

Jem mused in silence for a moment and then lounged away, uttering anew, "Miss Erica! Good Lord!"

"Nat, Nat! dear old Nat!" cries a young, silvery voice. The shingles are scattered far and wide, and down the shelving beach comes bounding a tall, lithe figure, whose every movement is grace. Her soft hair is flying about her, her eyes bright with glad greeting; and she lays her two bare hands—on one of which gleams the golden circlet—on his, and smiles into his uncouth face beaming now with delight.

"Lord, now; didn't I think you'd be down? and I got the boat ready and all—and so you're married, Miss Erica—hum—I mean—I ax pardin, ma'am."

"Never mind, never mind that," said Erica, laughing, and coloring a little too. "I'm Miss Erica still, you know, to all my friends. How good of you to get the boat ready—oh, it's the dear old Water Nymph,—how grand she looks," and straightway Miss Erica vaulted lightly into the boat and seated herself in the stern, leaning her elbows on her knees, and her firmly-rounded chin on her hands, looking up with those beautiful eyes which have never lost a certain sadness of expression they had even as a child. And now too, that the first gladness of this renewal of old acquaintanceship is subdued, the face loses its bright flush and gayety and settles into gravity.

"I did her up for you, miss—ma'am," said Nat, pulling himself up; "it does seem nice to see you settin' there quite comfor'ble like. And so you're married, Miss Erica."

"Yes, Nat, I'm married," answered the girl smiling. "Weren't you surprised when you heard who had bought Grayle House?"

"I was that pleased, ma'am," said Nat with rough energy, "there, I can't tell ye, when I know'd you was the genneman's wife. Be you going to live here?"

"Oh, no, Nat. Mr. St. John, that is my husband, is a writer—writes books, you know, and he has to live in London; but he's been working too hard, and so I asked him to come here for a time."

"Aye, I expect you haven't to ask for nought but once, missy," said Nat, laughing, and Erica smiled and looked off to the sea, and went on speaking.

"I've been married nearly a year, Nat, but I've not been in London; we have been mostly in Scotland, up in the north, yachting, because Mr. St. John was told he must rest."

"Was that him, miss—ma'am, I mean—I'm just nought but a stupid," said Poynter, pushing his hat "aft," "as I see this mornin' in the village—a tall gentleman, with a moustache, no beard, or whiskers like?"

"That was my husband," Erica said, and smiled and looked thoughtful, again resting her cheek on her hand; then she lifted her eyes to Nat's face, and half laughed, for she could read the shade of dissatisfaction there.

"What's the matter, Nat?" said she. "Something doesn't please you."

"Please me!" Nat looked rather uncomfortable at being read so, but added: "A very proud gentleman Mr. St. John, Miss Erica. Looks stern like, and sort o'——"

"What, Nat?" said the girl, curiously.

"Well, miss, I can't explain, not being no scholard. I shouldn't like to cross him, Miss Erica," said Nat Poynter; "but Lord, what do I know, and a man isn't name the worse for 'aving a temper of his own."

"No, indeed, Nat," said Erica, thoughtfully, and half sighed. "But I know you'll like him, Nat," she added; "he looks haughty, but he isn't, really."

"I'd like him for your sake, missy," said Poynter, "is Mr. Arnold well, Miss Erica?"

The girl started and flushed suddenly over cheek and brow.

Nat noticed this; he was sharp and shrewd, and not many things escaped him. It seemed an effort for Erica to answer him.

"Yes," she said, "he is well. He is away abroad, you know."

She stopped a moment, and then said, looking up steadily into Nat's rough face:

"Nat, I think you would do something for me; yes, I know you would." Then, hurriedly, as he was about to reply: "I want you never to mention Mr. Arnold at all to—to my husband, nor to anyone about here. You see, Nat, he doesn't even know I have a cousin. I haven't told him Mr. Arnold is—you know, Nat, you understand."

"I understand, Miss Erica," said the man, slowly, "and I wouldn't be the one to make mischief. I won't say nothin' about him."

"Thank you, Nat."

Only those simple words, in which lay who knows what humiliation and pain to her to say, and she looked again over the dancing waters, and could scarce see them for the mist that clouded over her eyes.

Nat, with a rough instinct that his affection for Miss Erica gave him, turned away from the subject.

"Don't you want to go out, miss—ma'am?" said he; "it's a nice arternoon. You ain't forgot your rowing?"

"Oh, no, Nat."

Erica St. John roused herself and spoke brightly again.

"Mr. St. John is coming down in a little while. He is a first-rate oarsman; you'll like to see him pull. Ah, there he is, coming down the beach."

And with a light springing step down the shingles came the man Poynter had seen that morning, tall and lithe, with a singular grace and freedom of movement.

The eyes of these two men, who were placed in their positions as widely apart as the poles, yet whose lives were to be so interwoven, met, and each scanned the other in the brief moment that Philip St. John took to reach the boat; the gentleman with one sweeping glance taking in the rough, untutored face, the shrewd eyes, the close-set mouth of the plebeian, seeing more in that one glance than Nat Poynter could read in the longer gaze of his eyes. But the inward impression of neither was entirely favorable.

Philip St. John answered, with a courteous bend of his head, the salute of the boatman, and then turned, with an instant softening of every feature, to Erica.

"I knew where to look for you, Erica," he said. "Making friends with the sea and an old acquaintance."

"Aye, sir," said Nat; "me and Miss Erica's old friends—leastways, I mean Mrs. St. John. I axe your pardon, sir. I'm so used to call her Miss Erica, I don't know as how I shall ever get to call her aught else."

"A slight offence, indeed, friend," with a half smile, grave, yet lighting up his face for a moment with singular brightness. "Call her what you will. Habit is a close friend. Is this your boat?"

"Yes, sir. I got it ready for missy. She'd like to go out, perhaps, such a fine arternoon. Will you, sir?"

The girl glanced up into Philip's face with a mute seconding of that request; but she did not ask it in words.

Nevertheless, he seemed to read her eyes, and smiled again.

"I need not ask you, Seagull," he said. "You are scarcely happy off the water. Will you take an oar?"

"Oh yes, please, Philip."

"But you had better put in a pair of sculls, too," Philip added, stepping into the boat, which Poynter had dragged down close to the sea ready to be shoved off. And Nat, producing the required sculls, gave the "Water Nymph" a vigorous push into the waves, and she went dancing over the sparkling blue water like a thing of life, and Erica waved her hand back to him with a smile.

"What a deliciously exhilarating feeling it gives one," said she, as Philip's long, swift stroke took them a little distance from the shore, "to feel the boat go off and dance like a feather on the water. Don't you seem to cut all connection with the earth and all trouble and care, Philip?"

He glanced up at her half smiling, bending lightly to the oars, and then slightly shook his head.

"As we carry ourselves with us everywhere, I scarcely think we cut connection with care, Erica," he said, an almost unconscious bitterness in tone and look; "but then you are young, and there are all sorts of possibilities to you."

"Why, Philip," the girl said, "you talk as if you had grown old. You are only twenty-eight now, and that is young."

"Ah, yes, so it is. I was not talking of years so much as feeling, though we may be forty at twenty."

Erica for a moment was silent, then she said, wistfully:

"But you, Philip——" and paused.

"Yes, but I——" He rested on his oars, suffering the boat to drift slowly under the warm sunshine that lay on sea and sky.

"You have no care, Philip?" she said, half timidly.

He pulled a few quick strokes before he answered her, then once more lay to.

"I have none, Erica, that your bright smile and gentle voice cannot lull to rest; none but what a restless ambition for which the world is all too slow; none but what my own temper of mind give me, and that, perhaps, is a legacy of wrong. Did you look for a sunny spirit in your husband, Erica? I don't think I am all you fancied when I was your lover, am I?"

The girl lifted a startled look to his face, and flushed to her very brow, but she answered him steadily.

"I never fancied you other than you are, Philip. If I understand you better, that is all the difference, if there is any difference."

She scarcely knew of any herself; that undefined feeling she had for him, mingling with, and perhaps shadowing, all her deep love for him, had not arisen since her marriage; it had always been in her heart.

"How should I have a sunny spirit?" Philip said, leaning his cheek on his hand, and speaking, it seemed, less to her than himself. "How should I be other than I am? I have only known what rest, happiness is since I knew you, Erica, and thus I could scarcely school myself to think that you really loved me."

"Philip! Philip!" Erica stretched out her hands, her eyes full of wistful pleading. "You know it now, don't you? Why were you mistrustful of me?"

"Why, Erica?" He had not noticed her movement, and her hands dropped again on her knees. "Because I had grown to think I was never meant for love. I had never told you anything of my boyhood—it is difficult to me to drag these things to light, even to you; but the need is on me now, I suppose, and I can speak. I was the child of injustice, and you know enough of me perhaps, to wonder that I am not a devil, rather than a man who can love; yet, I am the eldest, but I was always thrust aside and punished for wrongs I had never done; rebuked for haughtiness, reserve, what not, when my heart only yearned for love. My wishes were thwarted at every turn. Perhaps it was my fault in part. I know I am haughty and passionate of temper, that I am disdainful and impatient of inferiority, and I have a hundred other faults. At school and at college I made no friends, no one liked me, though everybody praised me; some, I think now, would have been my friends, but that I checked all advances, deeming them in my cynicism mere sycophants. There was only one being I loved, my brother Walter, though for him I was set aside, and that is because he is weak and clings to me as the ivy to the oak. Will his love last, I wonder, such as it is?

"It is strange," he said, "how some seem marked out to take all the buffetings and stings Fate can lay on them. Why, my very dumb favorites died or failed me. The horse I rode was killed, the dogs I petted scarcely loved me; and the dog I loved above them all turned on me one day in some freak of temper, and wounded me in the hand. You can see the scar now." He glanced down with a bitter, half-contemptuous smile to the white nervous hand that lay on his knee. "I don't know why he did it; I was never harsh to him, but he whined and fawned on me a minute after. I spurned him away, and never touched him again, never gave caress or look, though he often came about me and looked at me with those dumb brown eyes."

He paused, and the dark eyes drooped till the long lashes hid them, and Erica shrank back and half whispered:

"Philip, how implacable you are."

"I am sorry now; perhaps I was too hard," he answered, lifting his head again; "but I was full of bitterness then. Don't you see, Erica, it was not the physical wound that hurt me, it was the repetition of the same injustice that had ground me down through life. I don't know but what I should do the same now if I were touched nearly enough."

Never could the girl analyze the feeling that made her next words spring like lightning to her lips, and pass them ere she had time to think.

"If I, Philip—if I failed you," she said, bending forwards; "if I failed in love, in duty——"

But she shrank back, quailing at the sudden flash that leapt like lurid light into the brilliant eyes, at the stern passion that whitened his very lips.

"Philip, Philip," she uttered, "forgive me. I—I was but in jest——"

"Never jest then on such a subject; that touches me very nearly, remember."

It was all he said, and then he took up the sculls again, and began pulling swiftly.

Afterwards in the long, long years that came, she could recollect that he had not answered her question.

A shadow fell on her spirit, a sort of gloom; his sternness had chilled her—it seemed, indeed, to her almost harsh, and she sat perfectly quiet, looking out over the sea, which somehow had grown grey and cheerless to her; yet the sun shone warm on her cheek, and the waves glinted under its yellow rays; the fault lay in herself.

She could not force herself to renew the conversation, to speak all her sympathy, the love she yearned to lay at his feet. Ah, did he comprehend how she loved him?

"I should like to take an oar, Philip," she said, presently, rousing herself with an effort; "I am cold."

He ran in his sculls at once, and rose up to give her his hand as she stepped to the stroke seat, and as his hands clasped hers closely, he bent his head and kissed her forehead tenderly.

"Forgive, forget my harshness, my child," he said, softly, regretfully; "bear with me a little, Erica."

She answered him only by a swift upward glance, and a tremor of the sensitive lips; but he read in that that she had no power to speak, and then quietly he gave her the oar and resumed his seat.

And the light cloud passed, but not quite, for to Erica that slight episode had awakened into life a knowledge of one more phase of Philip's character, and her soul shrank and trembled as she thought of a possible conflict that might arise. Two duties, and which should prevail?

CHAPTER III.

THE FIRST CLOUD RISES.

The dusk of the short September evening was falling fast, the shadows were gathering over the sea, and turning the heaving waters into slate-grey; and a thin autumnal mist had crept up and lay like a gossamer web over every object, chilling the air which had lately been so bright and warm.

Erica sat by the window of the library at Grayle House, her hands lying idly on her lap, her dark eyes, grave and even sad in repose, gazing out over the expanse of rock-girt sea. She was musing over many things—over the glimpse that Philip had given her of his unloved boyhood and early manhood, grieving over the wrong done him and the well-nigh irretrievable havoc created in a nature still so noble, so capable of commanding love; unconsciously almost comparing him with Arnold, who had been loved and petted from his birth.

And what was he? Weakness was the least of his faults, for he was both selfish and headstrong, and uncontrolled. Shallow of nature, yet possessing a certain brightness and lovableness of temperament, which blinded many to his failings, he had just passed through college, without much credit to himself, and deeply in debt, and he was now abroad as far as Erica knew.

The bitter sting that poisoned all Erica's happiness was the knowledge that Arnold Murray was no honor to his name or hers. This was what she shrank from telling Philip. Philip, whose notions of honor were so sternly, fastidiously strict, who counted an infringement of honor the blackest sin, and made but little allowance, perhaps, for temptations; and who, if he knew Arnold's career, would have at once parted her from him, nor have suffered his wife to hold any communication with a man who has no high reputation for spotless honor. Not in his own loved brother even would he have forgiven any fall from noblesse. He had said to him, not sternly, but with a steadfastness in tone and look that Walter had understood, when the younger brother was going up to Oxford.

"You are very dear to me Walter, but on the day that you forget that you are a gentleman and a St. John, I shall forget that I have a brother."

How then could Erica fulfil the oath she had made that day marked out in her life as in letters of fire? Was she not to guard Arnold, to protect him? Had not already her duties clashed? To her the sacredness of that oath was absolute; she could conceive of nothing which should justify her in breaking it. She had bravely suffered in silence, tacitly deceiving her husband, deeming such deception the lesser of two wrongs.

GOVERNMENT CREAMERY.

AN INSTITUTION WORTHY OF NOTE—THE NEW-ENGLAND MECHANICAL INVENTION TO COME.

Mr. J. H. Wanzer, of Darlington, Wis., is at Guelph drawing plans and completing other arrangements for the establishment of a creamery in connection with the Ontario Agricultural College, on the cream gathering system. Mr. Wanzer is the nominee of a committee specially appointed by the Provincial Government to visit the creameries of the United States and Canada, and to choose the best man to inaugurate the new system here. The sum of $3,000 was voted to defray the expenses of starting the establishment. Hon. A. M. Ross, Provincial Treasurer and Commissioner of Agricultural was there lately in consultation with Mr. Wanzer and Mr. Prof. Mills, Principal of the College, in relation to the establishment of the new creamery. It is expected that the building now used as a cheese factory at the college can be made available for the use of the creamery, and that by this means the expense will not be greater than $1,200. Provision will be made for using the cream of 1,500 cows, but a start will be made with that of 200 or 300 cows. As the name implies, the cream only is collected from the farmers instead of taking the milk, as under the other system. The advantages are to the creamery greater certainty and less expense in transportation, and to the farmers the use of the skim-milk for stock-feeding. Guelph in the centre of a great stock-feeding region, and this system, while giving all or nearly all the advantages of the other systems, will not interfere with that business. Mr Wanzer is a practical man, having a creamery which uses the milk of 2,400 cows, and has an average daily product of 2,000 lbs. of butter during the season. He brings with him samples of the cans in use under this system. One is to be used by the farmers who supply the cream. It has a small glass scale at one side which will at a glance show what quantity of butter the cream will make. The other is for carrying the cream. It has a moveable top, which rests upon the cream and prevents it from churning. Mr. Wanzer says that farmers in his section make from $35 to $45 per cow each season. "I a fact," he said, "we tell them that we will pay them as much for the cream as they could get for the butter if they made it, and I think that is the practical result."

IMPROVE NUTRITION.—The central idea in the treatment of all Chronic Wasting Diseases, resulting in Nervous prostration and General Debility, is to improve the Digestion and Assimilation of Food, and the formation of Healthy Blood. Dr. Wheeler's Compound Elixir of Phosphates and Calisaya contains the only agents known that act directly as excitants of nutrition, by imparting tone to the Stomach, Liver and Pancreas, the great tripod that prepares nourishment for building up the organs and tissues of the body. The action of this remarkable preparation is extraordinary in strengthening and vitalizing the constitution, whether impaired by age, exhausted by excesses, bad habits, or run down by old complaints that have resisted all ordinary methods of treatment. Being a delicious cordial to take and perfectly harmless under all circumstances, it is eminently adapted to prostrate anæmic women and delicate children.

FIFTY-SEVEN DEATHS FROM ONE PIG.

On September 15, 1883, a trichinous pig was slaughtered in a little town of Saxony. The meat was sold in that and surrounding villages. It was eaten in a raw state as mince meat. From this 261 cases of trichiniasis are known to have occured, fifty seven of which proved fatal. Surely this pig was more ferin death than in life.

A NOVEL HOUSE.

The latest novelty in the shape of a house is being built by Church Brown, at 720 Jefferson avenue, Detroit. The first story is of gray sandstone; the second of brick, and projects two feet over the first. The third is also of brick, plastered over and sanded, and projects two feet over the second storey.

The Record of the Fairs.

The superiority of Wells, Richardson & Co's., Improved Butter Color over all others made, is again demonstrated by its record at the Autumnal Fairs. The test of practical use is what tells the story, and the great value of the premiums given by the Agricultural Fairs, lies in the fact, that the judges in these cases are regular farmers, who know what their needs are and what will supply them. Wells, Richardson & Co's Improved Butter Color, which has taken first premium at all fairs where exhibited, is put up in a Vegetable oil so prepared that it cannot become rancid, a most important property, the lack of which is fatal to so many of the Butter-Colors offered for sale. It does not Color the butter-milk; it imparts a bright natural color, which is unattained by many others; and being the strongest is the cheapest Color in the market.

THE THING THAT PARALYZED THE EDITOR.

"How glorious it is to be engaged in a purely intellectual occupation!" murmered a Toronto maiden, gazing rapturously into the admiring eyes of a country editor; "your own mental faculties for tools, and the whole universe for a work-shop. Now tell me," she added, "what do you find the most difficult thing connected with your noble profession?"

"Paying the hands," said the editor.

To lessen mortality and stop the inroads of disease, use Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyspeptic Cure. For all diseases arising from impure Blood, such as Pimples, Blotches, Biliousness, indigestion, etc., etc., it has no equal. Mrs. Thomas Smith, Elma, writes: "I am using this medicine for Dyspepsia. I have tried many remedies, but is the only one that has done me any good."

On July 4th., 1584, the first landing of Anglo-Saxons in America is said to have taken place at Roanoke Island, N. C., and the Toronto Globe thinks that the tercentenary of this event ought to have been observed along with Independence Day.

Mr. Spurgeon's household is a happy one. He told his friends assembled to celebrate his fiftieth birthday that he and his wife had never differed except upon one question. He did not think it worth while to go across the road to hear himself preach, while Mrs. S. was of the contrary opinion.

General Grant is at Long Branch for the Summer. He has discarded his crutches and is able to walk with a stout cane. The injury sustained to his hip last Christmas is still a source of trouble, however. Though there is not the slightest soreness under manipulation, there is a weakness of the entire limb which displays itself the moment he stands on it.

The papers of the United States, so far as they express any opinion, unanimously declare the election of Porfirio Diaz, as President of Mexico, a fortunate event for that republic. His intelligence, liberal foreign policy, force and integrity, and the peaceful circumstances of his accession to power promise well for the success and distinction of his administration.

When Doctors Disagree

it will be time enough to doubt the reliability of Kidney-Wort. Doctors all agree that it is a most valuable medicine in all disorders of the Liver Kidneys and Bowels and frequently prescribe it. Dr. P. C. Ballou of Monkton says: "The past year I have used it more than ever, with the best results. It is the most successful remedy I have ever used." Such a recommendation speaks for itself. Sold by all druggists. See advertisment.

Advertising Chestnut!!!

"It has become so common to begin an article, in an elegant, interesting style.

"Then run it into some advertisement, that we avoid all such,

"And simply call attention to the merits of Hop Bitters in as plain, honest terms as possible.

"To induce people

"To give them one trial, which so proves their value that they will never use anything else."

"Tim Rumsey so favorably noticed in all the papers,

"Reviews and secular, is

"Having a large sale, and is supplanting all other medicines.

"There is no denying the virtues of the Hop plant, and the proprietors of Hop Bitters have shown great shrewdness and ability

"In compounding a medicine whose virtues are so palpable to every one's observation.

Did She Die?

"No!

"She lingered and suffered along, pining away all the time for years,"

"The doctors doing her no good;"

"And at last was cured by this Hop Bitters the mystery may as much about."

"Indeed! Indeed!"

"How thankful we should be for that medicine."

A Daughter's Misery.

"Eleven years our daughter suffered on a bed of misery,

"From a complication of kidney, liver, rheumatic trouble and Nervous debility,

"Under the care of the best physicians,

"Who gave her disease various names,

"But no relief,

"And now she is restored to us in good health by as simple a remedy as Hop Bitters that we had shunned for years before using it."—THE PARENTS.

Father is Getting Well.

"My daughters say:

"How much better father is since he used Hop Bitters."

"He is getting well after his long suffering from a disease declared incurable."

"And we are so glad that he used your Bitters."—A LADY of Utica, N. Y.

☞ None genuine without a bunch of green Hops on the white label. Shun all the vile, poisonous stuff with "Hop" or "Hops" in their name. 30-4t

The tendency of every good movement to run to seed, says a London paper, has been very strongly shown in the craze for "slumming," as a distraction for people who have nothing to do, which has followed on the "Bitter Cry of Outcast London." The climax of this has now been reached in the organization of personally conducted parties of ladies and gentleman to view the opium dens and other dreadful places in the East End, by "a confidential agent."

SHE WAS A PICNIC GIRL.

"Carrie," said one Lindsay girl to another yesterday, "are you going to the picnic tomorrow?"

"I am. Are you?"

"Of course."

"What do you intend to wear?"

"My white muslin, of course. What do you intend to wear?"

"I will wear a waterproof cloak. I've been at picnics before."

An Editor's Tribute.

Theron P. Keator, editor of Ft. Wayne, Ind., "Gazette," writes: "For the past five years have always used Dr. King's New Discovery, for coughs of most severe character, as well as for those of a milder type. It never fails to effect a speedy cure. My friends to whom I have recommended it speak of it in the same high terms. Having been cured by it of every cough I have had for five years, I consider it the only reliable and sure cure for Cough, Colds, etc." Call at Taylor and McDonald's Drug Store and get a Free Trial Bottle. Large size $1.00.

DON'T CHARGE FOR IT.

"Waiter!"

"Yas, sah."

"There's a little chicken in this boiled egg you brought me."

Waiter eyes the egg curiously to satisfy himself, and then answers assuringly:

"Dat's all right, boss; don't suppose de ole man'll charge extra for de fewell."

CAUTION.

When you are desirous of obtaining Dr. Scott's Prepared Spice, and your store keeper does not have it, do not be persuaded to take anything else but that; every box has our trade mark on the top, which is a horse's head through a horse shoe.

There never was and never will be, a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated diseases rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill, in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in a sound unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grevious ills. By its gradual and judicious use, the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength, by the influence which Quinine exerts on Nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease, and, by tranquillizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses throughout the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame, and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result, improved appetite. Northrop & Lyman of Toronto, have given to the public their superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate and, gauged by the opinions of scientists, this wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. All druggists sell it.

ALWAYS READY.

"See here, Mr. Milkman, you call this fresh milk, and yet it is sour. It could not have been milked this morning."

"Oh, yes, mum, indeed it was, mum. You know it stormed last night and lightning always sours milk," replied the milkman.

"But how could the lightning of last night affect it if it was not milked until this morning?"

"Well, I guess the cows must have been struck, mum."

A Stinging Sensation in Throat and Palate called heartburn, and oppression at the pit of the stomach after eating, are both the offspring of dyspepsia. Alkaline salts like carbonate of soda may relieve but cannot remove the cause. A lasting remedy is to be found in Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyspeptic Cure. Those associate organs, the liver and bowels, benefit in common with their ally, the stomach, by the use of this benign and blood-purifying remedy.

Itching Piles—Symptoms and Cure.

The symptoms are moisture, like perspiration, intense Itching, increased by scratching very distressing, particularly at night, seems as if pin-worms were crawling in and about the rectum; the private parts are sometimes affected. If allowed to continue very serious results may follow. "SWAYNE'S OINTMENT" is a pleasant, sure cure. Also for Tetter, Itch, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Erysipelas, Barbers' Itch, Blotches, all scaly, crusty Skin Diseases. Box by mail 50 cents; three for $1.25. Address, DR. SWAYNE & SON, Phila., Pa. Lacrosse.

The Beaverton lacrosse club will be down on Friday, 8th of August, to make another try for the championship medal. The Beaverton club has, we believe, arranged for an excursion to take place to Peterborough on that day.

Artillery Competition.

The Peterborough contingent of the Durham Field Battery is practising in the Drill Shed for the artillery competition the battery is to enter in Toronto, about the middle of September.

Special to Gentlemen.

Fair, VanEvery & Co. have received a very large consignment of ENGLISH FUR HATS (intercepted on transit to Winnipeg.) The styles are most recent, and the prices so very low as to warrant a speedy sale. Go early for first choice. 31-tf

The Whortleberry.

The wholesome whortleberry is said to be a light crop this year. The local supply is about nil, those appearing in the market being imported from the shores of Georgian Bay, in the Muskoka District. Byng Inlet, at the mouth of the Magnetawan River, is the shipping port.

Money.

Mr. John A Bennett, of Otonabee, is prepared to make loans on real estate and to purchase mortgages. Loans will be made at the lowest rates of interest, payable when the borrower deems the most convenient time, the principal, being payable at such times as may be agreed upon. Expenses are very light. 12-tf

For The Canoe Camp.

On Friday morning the first detachment from the Peterborough canoe squadron, started for the camp of the Association, situated at that delightful spot, Grindstone Island, Lake of the Thousand Islands. There were eight or ten in the first consignment of canoeists, which, will of course be followed by many others.

Baseball.

The Silver Stars of Peterborough have made arrangements for a match game of baseball with the nine of the Uxbridge baseball club, on August 12th. The match will form one the chief attractions of our Civic holiday, for the Uxbridge nine is one of the best east of Toronto, and the Silver Stars are improving in form in a remarkable manner. The two clubs coming together on the 12th., will no doubt give a most interesting exhibition.

Bridge Building.

Peterborough is not only the acknowledgd commercial centre of the Midland district, but she holds a leading place as a manufacturing centre. Her manufacturers find their way all over Canada, and in one line at any rate, (canoes) nearly all over the world. The Central Iron works, owned by Mr. Law, are securing a wide reputation for good and reliable work. Only a few days ago Mr. Law obtained the contract for the iron work of the fine new bridge at Campbellford, and now he has been awarded the contract for the iron work of the new bridge to be put up across Pigeon Creek, at Omemee.

The Ontario & Quebec.

The Kaladar Charybdis on the O. & Q., has a most insatiate maw for materials. Thousands of tons and thousands of cubic feet of material have been dumped into the sink hole; Oliver Twist-like, it asks for "more," but, unlike Mr. Bumble, the railway authorities have to respond. One day the track appears as solid as the foundations of the Bald mountains, in the vicinity, and very heavily laden freight trains pass over it in safety; the next day the track disappears under several feet of water. Every time it is plugged up, the engineers are confident it never will sink again, but the sink pe no respect for their engineering reputation, and down it goes. The company desire to have it perfectly safe before heavy trains are run over it regularly, and therefore the running of regular trains is again postponed; under the circumstances, no fixed date can be announced.

Change of Time.

Parties intending to patronize the cheap excursion per O. & Q., to Toronto, on Civic Holiday, will be interested in knowing that on account of a change in the time card, the excursion train will not leave the station here, till a quarter to eight o'clock.

Springsteen Truss and Supporter.

See Prof. Hotchkin's springless truss and supporter advertisement in another column of this paper. Go and see him. He defies the hernia he cannot hold. Will be at the Calese House, Sept. 29th and 30th. 22-td

True Blue Assembly.

The McWilliams lodge of True Blues intend closing their demonstration on Derry Day, August 12th, by a grand quadrille assembly to be held in Bradburn's Opera House in the evening. The City Band orchestra will furnish first-class music for the occasion.

Coal Oil.

Owing to a "combination" having been formed among the oil refiners, coal oil is advancing in price every week. Consumers should take their cans to CHINA HALL and get them filled at once, and thereby save money. China Hall has the best quality of oil in town. Try it once. 31-tf

Civic Holiday Excursion.

Keep in mind the cheap excursion over the Ontario and Quebec Railway, to Toronto on August 12th. Fare, only $1.25 for round trip, with eight hours in the city. Train leaves at 7.45 o'clock sharp, and gets back at the early hour of ten o'clock. Payment of one dollar additional, will make excursion tickets good for two days.

Collegiate Institute.

After two meetings, the Committee on Appointments have succeeded in only partially filling the vacancies on the staff of the Institute. In addition to the headmaster, at the meeting held on Wednesday evening of last week, Mr. Horning, B.A., of Brantford, was selected as Mathematical Master, and Mr. J. H. Long, B.A., of Aylmer (Ont.), Modern Language Master. On the appointment of the remaining teachers, the Committee, which comprises the whole Board, failed to agree.

Removal.

Miss Karch has removed her stationery and fancy goods business to the premises next north of Langford's furniture warerooms, George street. Miss Karch, in her last place of business, by attention to her trade and the wants of her customers and courteous treatment of them, worked up a good trade, and we hope that all of her many old customers, and any new ones who desire honest value for their money and prompt and polite service, will find out her new locality and bestow their patronage upon it.

Cricketers' Excursion.

On Thursday afternoon (to-day) the Peterborough Cricket Club make an excursion per steamer Golden-Rye, to Savigney's Point, where on arrival the party will pic-nic. The steamer leaves the Wolfe street wharf at three o'clock in the afternoon and returns at ten p.m. A scow will be attached and music furnished for dancing. Hot tea will also be provided at the pic-nic grounds by the committee. The number of invitations being limited, there is no danger of over-crowding, and a pleasant afternoon's enjoyment may be expected.

Mark-St. Methodist Church, Ashburnham.

The above-named church is now undergoing some repairs, which will very materially add to its appearance. The walls and ceiling are now finished. It is the intention of the committee to build a nice brick porch in front and take out the one on the inside. The church will be heated with hot air and lighted with gas. The work is being pushed forward, and the congregation expect to worship in it by the 24th of this month. Re-opening service will be held on that date. Some distinguished minister is expected from abroad. These services will be followed by a tea meeting on Monday evening, 25th inst. Further particulars next week.

Civic Holiday.

Peterborough' Civic Holiday, next Tuesday will be a busy day for the pleasure seekers, who may try to take in all the amusements to be presented. This is the list:

Excursion over O. & Q. to Toronto, $1.25 and return; leave at 7.45 o'clock, arrive home at ten p. m.

Lacrosse match in the morning—Norwood and Junor Peterboroughs, for the second heat for the Calcutt Brewery Cup.

True Blue Demonstration all day. Quadrille assembly in Bradburn's Opera House, in the evening.

Baseball match in the morning, Uxbridge and Silver Stars.

This is the regular programme, which will, in many cases, be supplemented by fishing, boating, driving, lawn tennis, bicycling, etc.

A Splendid Chance.

It will be seen by an advertisement in another column that Mr. D. W Dumble offers for sale a number of Building Lots in various parts of the town on ten years credit. No money down, interest only to be paid for first five years, and thereafter yearly instalments with the right to pay at any time as may suit the convenience of the purchaser. This offer enables a poor man to use his money in erecting a building, and so he gets rid of rent, and secures a home for himself. Building will be cheap this year and no doubt many will take advantage of this very liberal offer. Besides lots in town, Mr. Dumble offers a number of lots in Ashburnham, and several park lots on the same terms. Call at his office and see plans, &c.

Madame Rossiter's Concert.

The concert given in the Opera House, by the versatile Madame C. C. Rossiter, on Friday night, under the auspices of the Fire Brigade Band, was, in a musical and elocutionary sense a decided success. There was, however, a smaller audience than the performance, or the indebtedness of the public to the Band, demanded. Madame Rossiter's performances on the piano-forte were of a very high order, and were received with cordial approval and recalls. Her playing on the English concertina showed her to be a mistress of this instrument, while her recitations demonstrated that her elocutionary powers were of a really first-class order. Her recitation of the "Old Maid's Adventure" was superb, and if that had been her only effort, one that appreciated good elocution, would have been satisfied with the programme. The Band rendered two selections, the overture to Il Trovatore, and the Kyrie from Mozart's 12th Mass, in excellent style, and they would appear to thoroughly deserve the high compliment Madame Rossiter paid them when she asserted that she had never seen a similar organization of similar excellence in England in a town of the size of Peterborough. Mr. Porteous contributed to the programme, in his usually perfect manner, two or three songs, which were heartily appreciated and followed by encores, to which he obligingly responded. Mr. Heathfield satisfactorily performed the necessary piano-forte accompaniments. The concert all round was a very pleasant success. It is to be hoped, however, that the next time the Fire Brigade Band appeals to the patronage of the public, there will be numerically a more hearty response. Their success and liberality in supplying the public with first-class music, demand the fullest recognition.

New Felt Hats.

I. Robinson & Co. are showing a lot of new Felt Hats—Soft and Stiff—etc. to $1.00, worth $1.50 to $2.00. Stylish English. Call and see them. 29

And of the Best Quality.

The Orillia Times, being a Reform newspaper, can do no other than speak the truth, which it does emphatically when it says of the Fire Brigade band, during the Foresters' excursion to Orillia:—"The Peterborough Fire Brigade Band discoursed music sweet during the lacrosse match on Thursday without stint and of the best quality."

Grand Concert.

Under the auspices of the Girls' Friendly Society, a grand concert will be given in the Town Hall, Ashburnham, on Monday next, August the 11th, at 8 p.m. Miss Ernestinger, of St. Thomas, has kindly consented to assist on the occasion, and she will be aided by some of the best vocalists in town. Professor Doucet, the noted violinist, has also promised to attend. Admission, 25 cents.

Board of Health.

The officials of the Board of Health are bound to clean the town. On Tuesday Messrs. Thomas Laplant, Patrick Hogarty and John Dwyre and Mrs. Kinney each contributed the sum of $1 and $2.25 costs for neglecting to clean their premises after being duly notified. The Police Magistrate is bound to strictly enforce the law, when the cases are clearly proven.

Our New Serial Story.

We begin in this issue a charming story, "Erica's Sacrifice," which will be continued for several numbers. The plot of the story is deeply engrossing, and the story is full of incident and interest, which does not, for a moment, flag. Now is the time to subscribe. THE EXAMINER will be sent from now till January, 1885, for forty cents. Back numbers containing the opening chapters of "Erica's Sacrifice" can be obtained.

Fruit Jars.

Every person putting up fruit should give the jars the first attention; without a perfect sealing jar, it is useless going to the expense and trouble of canning fruit. China Hall is the only store in Peterboro' selling the improved perfect fitting "Crown Jar" in firsts. Every jar warranted. It costs no more to have the best as the enormous quantities, we handle enables us to sell our jars as low as any house in the trade and give a better jar. Stone Jars and Jelly cans all sizes at China Hall. 30-tf

Pacific Finale to a Party Feud.

The feud said to have been existing between the Carew brothers, of Ennismore, and the Montgomery brothers, of Smith, has at different times found bloody expression. On Saturday of last week the latest encounter took place at Cavanagh's Hotel, which was quelled without trouble, but which broke out later in the day near Bridgenorth, this time also without any serious results. Charges and counter charges were laid by the parties to the feud, and these were heard before Police Magistrate Dumble on Thursday, who, after soundly reproving and admonishing the parties, bound them over to keep the peace. Two Montgomery brothers, two of the Carew brothers and Lawrence Connors, with their respective sureties, entered into bonds.

A Little Stroke of Lightning.

Persons who heard four taps—"only that and nothing more"—on the fire alarm bell, on Saturday night about eleven o'clock, had their enjoyment of Sunday's sermon interfered with by mental surmises as to where in town the fire could have been. It was at Faucher's restaurant. Mr. Faucher undertook to move one of the electric lamps in his place, himself. In so doing he did not make proper connections, and the electric fluid in bridging the vacant space, burst out in sparks which developed into a flame that set fire to adjoining wood. The flames were discovered and the alarm rung, but the simple turning off of the electric current, put an end to the trouble. None but experts can safely manage an electric lamp, it is as dangerous as gas in the bedroom of a man who feels that it is his mission to blow the gas out, on laying down to—die.

Another large shipment of Goods just received at Turnbull's, comprising new designs in Dress Goods, Mantles and Ulster Cloths, Feather Trimmings, Cut Flushes, etc. If you hear of anything new in the Dry Goods line look for it at Turnbull's.

An Important Enlargement.

The direction of the business career of Mr. Wm. Lech, Furrier, has always been forward and recently he has taken another stride in advance. Urged by the growing demands of his trade, he has enlarged his premises to nearly twice their former size. His building was before, three stories, 24x50 feet, and the lower story, 24x100. Now the enlargement of his premises makes three full stories, of 24x100 feet, with ample cellerage. The building is done in the most substantial and thorough manner. The internal improvements, consequent upon this extension are in progress, and will be completed in about three weeks. The small plate glass sash lights in the front windows, are replaced with plates, 9ft 11in x 6ft 7in. The shop next adjoining, on the north, also owned by Mr. Lech, has been also enlarged to three full stories, and is being fitted up for the Tailoring and Gent's Furnishing store of Mr. Hugh Ross, who will open his doors in September.

Range, Rifle and Result.

The Peterborough County Rifle Association is a live institution. Practice shooting goes on almost every week, when the "bang" of the rifle and the "ping" of the bullets are familiar sounds on their ranges. On the last Thursday afternoon of each month matches are fired. The prizes in these matches are 400 rounds of ammunition, and the medal of the Ontario Rifle Association to the marksman making the highest aggregate score in three months' shooting. The following are the most creditable scores in the matches already shot:

	May.	June.	July.	Total.
A. Blade	46	31	—	77
J. Weller	45	—	34	79
Geo. Fitzgerald	45	24	26	95
James Stothart	44	—	—	44
D. Cameron	36	27	30	93
Dr. Bell	37	32	47	109
F. Hall	35	23	40	97
J. B. Pentland	—	26	—	26
R. Fair	—	21	—	21
J. W. Miller	—	—	47	47
W. R. Hill	—	—	37	37

The light scores in the June competition are accounted for by a heavy wind blowing across the range on the day of shooting. By the way, it may be remarked that in order to encourage rifle shooting, it is a sensible idea to give ammunition as prizes. This practice, if made a practice at the annual meetings, would greatly promote the objects of the Association. Many a volunteer, who has the stuff of a good marksman in him, is not financially able to purchase ammunition to practice as much as he should do. Many of the prizes given generally are trifling trinkets, which the winner is not at all proud of, and are as useless to him as a gift of a bicycle to a "knuckling baby. A prize of ammunition is always useful.

ENTRANCE EXAMINATION.

The examiners have completed the work of looking through and reporting upon the examination papers of the candidates who wrote at the examination for admission to the Peterborough Collegiate Institute. Out of ninety two candidates only thirty nine secured a sufficient number of pass marks, but of these twenty-one failed in the dictation paper. The following is a list of those who secured the requisite number of marks; those names with an asterisk appended, passed the examinations, the others were wrecked on the dictation papers:

John Alfred Hill,
Robert Armstrong, 288.*	Robert Brodie, 282.
Fred Bacon, 288.*	Walter Bryce, 344.*
Taylor Crowe, 339.*	Harold Dumble, 295.*
Harry Foot, 327.*	John Gemmel, 293.
Richard Gilkespie, 416.*	Vernon Halliday, 346*
Robert Hicks, 289.	Willie Hunter, 283.
David Kerr, 297.	Ernest Middleton, 289
John Pope, 371.	Fred Ross, 289.
Joseph Sandilands, 286.	Bertha Brandreth 299
Lorena Bust, 312.	Roberta Butler, 295.*
Polly Cosbo, 446.*	Martha Donaldson 291.*
Mercey Dean, 324.	Jennie Davidson, 288.
Charlotte Ernest, 325.	Evelyne Ferguson 315*
Minnie Montgomery, 297.	Ada Miller, 292.
Annie Mowarry, 296.	Lizzie Mercer, 294.
Emma Mercer, 293.*	Mary Porter, 293.*
Maggie Richard, 295.*	Harriett Reid, 288.
Martha Whittington, 289.	Huldah Weir, 345.*
Ella Walton, 311.	Maggie Young, 445.*

The following is the paper on

"DICTATION:

The Presiding Examiner will read the passage three times: the first time to enable the Candidate to collect the sense; the second, slowly, to enable the Candidates to write down the words; and the third, for review. Value—22. Two marks to be deducted for each word mis-spelled.

The atmosphere being the medium through which the sun's heat is conveyed to and from the earth, the lower and denser strata absorb the greatest amount, and are necessarily the warmer; hence, as a general rule, temperature decreases with the height to which we ascend, but not uniformly, as has been established by recent balloon ascents. As air is expanded by heat and contracted by cold, the warmer and lighter volumes will ascend, and the colder and denser will rush in to supply the vacancy. In this way currents, or winds, are originated in the atmosphere, and on these currents depend, in a great measure, the essentials of climatic diversity. As a property of the gaseous nature of the atmosphere, the vapor generated from the earth's waters by the heat of the sun ascends, and is diffused through its mass in an invisible state. The humidity decreases with the height, and in so rapid a ratio that at the altitude of five or six miles it is almost inappreciable.

Ventilation, wholesome, mutinous, responsible, epidemic, obedience, sewer, colorless, raiment, appellation, colonial, bayonet."

There certainly does not seem to be anything in the above paper to justify the complaints that have been made of its being very difficult. Considering that our public schools supply the mass of our population with all the education they will ever obtain at school; the lad or lass who seeks to graduate from the public school, to the High School, thus practically confessing he can learn no more there, is certainly not fit to do so, unless he can overcome a paper like the above. If a pupil on going as far as the public school, can take him educationally, is not equal to the paper on dictation presented, then there is something radically wrong in our school system. We acquire show at the expense of solidity; we pay our tithes of theory, 'ology, and "cram" and neglect the weightier matters of the—curriculum, the rudimentary foundation upon which the pupil after leaving school, can, by the aid of his common sense, build the superstructure of the most generally valuable education, a sound, practical one, adapted to the requirements of his everyday life in the world of action.

Why, in the days of "spelling schools," every school section had a few lads, often not over a dozen years of age, who would stand up by the hour, barefoot and confident, and wrestle and overcome, orthographical problems much more complicated than the above example—lads who would only think it fun to "smash" the foregoing dictation paper.

The conclusion seems plain that public school pupils, who cannot pass on such a paper, had better stay in the public school, till they can learn enough to do so. There is one beauty about spelling—the teacher can "cram" the pupil on almost any other subject. The pupil must know how to spell—a slipshod superficiality and smattering won't do.

Careful attention given to mourning orders at Turnbull's. Miss Iron's mate in Millinery makes Turnbull's show rooms a favorite resort.

PERSONAL.

Mr. William Spence, who has been absent for the last five or six years in the Australian colonies, has returned home to Peterborough.

Mr. David English, a former Peterborough typo, now of Montreal, where he is conducting with much success his own job printing establishment, is in town renewing old associations.

We have pleasure in announcing that Mr. Alex. Elliott has been appointed Peterborough agent of the Dominion Express Company, whose business is conducted over the Ontario and Quebec Railway. Mr. Elliott possesses the qualifications to make him well-fitted for the office—business experience, ability, obliging disposition, reliability, and attention to business.

Dominion Mills.

Mr. Wm. Davidson has succeeded to the management of the "Hall Mills," to be known hereafter as the "Dominion Mills." Mr. Davidson is in a position to maintain the reputation for good work and liberal dealing the mills have gained, all the old hands being retained. The public can rely on obtaining first class flour, feed, etc. Farmers will find a good cash market for wheat and all kinds of coarse grains, at the mills.

The Model Farmer.

In a paragraph in connection with some tall timothy on the ten-acre lot of our portly Market Clerk, Mr. John Doherty, it was supposed that the yield of the crop would be two and a half tons to the acre. The actual yield has fairly outraged calculations. The hay has been cured and housed, and it has been found to yield over three tons to the acre. As a model farmer Mr. Doherty is a success, and a proof of the wisdom of having a little farm well tilled.

Syndicate Camp.

The following gentlemen, composing that jolly annual institution the Syndicate camp, started on Monday morning at daybreak, for Bushing Narrows, Stony Lake: Messrs. Alex. Stewart, captain, A. Hall, A. McNeil, S. W. English, C. E. Henderson (Napanee,) Wm. Murray, (Montreal.) Predatory Young's Pointers, cruelly wronged the syndicate by breaking into Costello's hotel premises and rummaging the stores sent ahead on Saturday.

Our New Watchmaker, Mr. Hughan, comes well recommended, and we are sure any work entrusted to him will be done in good style. Office lately occupied by Elias Barnham, Simcoe Steet. 18-tf

CIVIC HOLIDAY.

HOW IT WAS SPENT.

The Toronto Excursion—True Blue Demonstration—Wallis' Grove Picnic—Baseball Match—Other Amusements.

The weather on Tuesday was delightful, business was abandoned entirely, and everybody seemed to be bent on pleasure seeking in one form or other. The first event of the day was as far as numbers went, a great success. At eight o'clock, twelve well filled passenger coaches (two from Norwood) drew out of the O. & Q. station. The journey to Toronto was well made, the party arriving in good time, and the excursionists enjoyed themselves in doing the city. The start home was made on schedule time, but the journey was tedious. The way operators had deserted their posts for bed, and there was most vexatious delay in arousing them and securing orders so that the train could proceed. This delay was so great that it was about 2:30 o'clock a. m. before the train reached home.

TRUE BLUE'S DEMONSTRATION.

At an early hour the brethern began to arrive, the Nassau detachment being the first on the ground. They, with the McWilliam's Lodge of True Blues formed the reception escort at the Midland station. The next were the Fraserville brethern, closely followed by those from Lindsay, having with them the Citizens band. These then formed procession and marched to the O. & Q. station, where the Manvers brethern arrived. The whole then marched up town and broke off on the market square for dinner.

At two o'clock the brethern reassembled on the market square and formed procession, which marched in the following order:

LINDSAY BAND,

Hacket lodge True Blues, No 38, Lindsay, Mr. John Milburn Master, and 45 members.

L. O. L. No 38, Manvers. Mr. Wm. Porter Master, fife and drum band, and 30 members, as well as personal deputations from the other Manvers lodge.

Centerville L. O. L. No 46, Mr. John Donaldson, deputy Master, fife and drum band 40 members.

Nassau Mills L. O. L. No 447, (Wellington Lodge, Douro) Mr. Wm. King, Master, and thirty members.

Young Canadian L. O L., Peterborough, No 49, Mr. Joseph Batton, Master and — members.

Peterborough L. O. L. No 80, Mr. Thos. Brown Master, and — members.

CITY BAND.

McWilliams True Blue Lodge No 25, 80 members.

There was representatives of the Milbrook preceptory and other preceptories not present as bodies, who joined in the procession, which marshalled by Mr. F. Weir, Master of McWilliams Lodge of True Blues, marched through the principal streets, with banners flying and bands playing the airs of the order. It then returned to the market square, and disbanded till four o'clock, when the brethern re-assembled and escorted the departing lodges to their respective trains, as the latter became due. The utmost good order throughout was observed.

THE ASSEMBLY.

In the evening a large number attended the ball in the opera house, which was very successful. Dancing was kept up till a late hour.

NO 1 WARD AT WALLIS' GROVE.

The picnic at Wallis' grove, held under the auspices of the ladies of No 1 ward was a very pleasant success, much more so than was anticipated. The weather was delightful and the attendance was large. The ladies had provided an abundance of edibles, which met with a ready demand, while ice cream and confectionery stands drove a brisk trade. A platform for dancing was kept hot by the feet of the dancers, to the excellent music of Doucet and Martin's string band. During the afternoon sports and games were held with the following results:

Girls' Race—Nellie Hickey.
100 Yards Race—S. Callaghan.
Old Men's Race—Wm. Buck.
Three Leg Race—Simons and Corcoran.
Boys' Race, 100 Yards—Joseph Sovais.
Standing Jump—S. Callaghan.
Long Jump—S. Callaghan.
Potato Race—Harry Welsh.
Irish Jig, No. 1—Miss Hyland and Dan. Simons.
Irish Jig, No. 2—Miss Hayes and Sid. Martin.

The success of the pic-nic was chiefly due to the energetic efforts of the following committee of ladies:—Mesdames J. Henry, Thos. Henry, N. T. Laplante, McDonald, Hurley, Dunn and Carveth. The financial results of the pic nic will be an addition of about $200 to the building fund of St. Peter's Cathedral.

THE BASEBALL MATCH.

There was a large crowd to witness the baseball match on the Cricket Grounds between the Silver Stars and the Uxbridge team. Play began at 3 o'clock and continued till six, Uxbridge winning easily by a score of 47 to 17. The Stars made a brilliant start and finish, scoring in the first and last innings 7 and 6 respectively. The following are the names and initial positions of the Silver Stars nine:—Pitcher, T. Sanderson; catcher, F. Billings; first base, A. Seney; second base, J. Callaghan; short stop, W. H. Dayman; right field, D Cashin; left field, W. Lannin; centre field, H. Evans.

AT FAUCHER'S.

The Golden-Eye left at 8 and 1 p.m. with a good number for Faucher's summer hotel, where a pleasant day was spent.

CHAMPIONSHIP LACROSSE.

The Peterboroughs Retain the Medal.

The Cheshires of Beaverton vs the Peterborough Club—Only Three Games Played—The Beavertons begin come down the "Cheshires" and go home the "Beavers."

Last Friday afternoon the Cheshire Lacrosse Club of Beaverton, made its second attempt to secure the Championship medal of the Central Ontario District, but without success. At about three o'clock the men on either side were drawn up on the field equipped as the following position.

PETERBOROUGH.		BEAVERTONS.

J. Hall	Field Captain	L. [illegible]
A. [illegible]	Umpire	D. McMillan

Mr. Fred H. Rousseau of Norwood filled the difficult and difficult position of referee, and Mr. Samuel Rose fixed for the hospitality of Cheshire, and, as always, hereafter the Cheshires secured the ball, passing it to Kelly; the latter made a sharp run down on the Cheshire goal, and passing the rubber to Scott, the latter made a short run on the flags, which were however well defended; the ball was sent up field, and the home team's defence were put to work; but Miles and Joyal were equal to the occasion, and made useless the vigorous attacks on the home position made by the Checkers. The game became lively, and was by no means one-sided. The Checkers have improved immensely in form since their last visit; they certainly deserve the name they have assumed, for they check closely and sharply, but in the field the playing of Sheehy and Kelly was beyond their checking, and several times resulted in danger to the visitors' flags. In this game Peterborough as usual did not pay sufficient attention to defence, so that after a sharp "scrimmage" in centre field, W. K. Cameron, of the Checkers, secured the ball and making a shot on goal, there was only Joyal between the centre field and the flags. The shot was a good and swift one, too, the ball which struck the netting of Joyal's lacrosse stick, instead of being stopped, went clean through the rotten thongs, and of course through the goal, this winning the first game for the Checkers after eleven minutes play.

THE SECOND GAME,

which began at once was even more gamely fought on both sides than the first. The teams seemed to be pretty evenly matched, for the Checkers played a better game than usual, and the home team seemed to be a little relaxed, yet individual members made good plays. The first danger was to the home poles, but Joyal, Miles, and Tierney took care that the ball did not stay long when it came; while on the attack field, Rutherford and Giroux sharply seconded the efforts of Sheehy, Kelly, Scott, and Fortye. Henderson did some very effective playing at the first defence point, while Tierney's long shots often sent the ball and the danger down on the visitors flags. But the game see-sawed from side to side of the field pretty evenly. The checking of the visitors was close, but the neat catches of Howden, the ubiquitous presence of Sheehy who when he got warmed up to his work, seemed to be everywhere, kept them more than busy. At length the ball got on Rutherford's stick, and he, with his peculiar pirouette-like dodges, evaded the enemy's checks, and passing the sphere to Rudkins, the latter passed to Scott who sent it flying between the poles 24 minutes after the face.

The ball was faced for

at four o'clock, Sheehy getting the draw, and the visitors' defence had to wake up; again the play worked up the field where Kelly and Rutherford did good service in returning the danger to the Checkers' goal. Then followed a good deal of see-saw—from end to end, Joyal, however, showing his old force and facility in getting the ball behind goal and his old swing in sending it back to the other end of the field, and the close calls on the Checkers' goals were frequent. At length Giroux got the ball behind the Checkers' goal, dropped it over in front to Rudkins, who passed it between the flags.

This game, however, the Checkers disputed, claiming that Giroux had fouled the ball by touching it with his hand, and that the foul had been called before the ball was put through. This unpleasantness was of course referred to the Referee, whose decision, it would be expected would be accepted. He heard the evidence on both sides. The field captain of the Checkers had not seen any foul, and could not call "foul," and, of course, the referee could not and did not hear any foul called. He therefore, after due deliberation, decided the game in favor of Peterborough, the only course left him. The majority of the Checkers' team appeared to accept this decision, and to be willing to play, but one contumacious coon held out, and positively refused to play any longer. The same man, it is said, never allows a game if "squealing" will avail to prevent; it; when Peterborough won their first game—the second of the match—this stalwart kicker accused his own goal keeper of "selling" the game, when he, no doubt, did his best to prevent the rubber passing between the poles. The consequence was that the Checkers' team refused to continue the match, and the referee after their refusing to come to time, decided that Peterborough had won the match. The Peterboroughs then gave the usual three cheers for the visitors, who where either, like Achilles, "sulking in the tent," or scurrying off to catch the train, on which they left at 4.40.

NOTES.

The party that accompanied the Checkers were terrific howlers. Whenever a Checker player achieved the commonest success, these enthusiastic parties would set up a chorus of frantic howls, intended for cheers.

The playing was pretty evenly divided in point of merit, but there does not seem to be much doubt, that the home team could win in nine matches out of ten.

The City Band furnished music during the match.

There was a good attendance of spectators.

It was pretty generally asserted that the Checkers showed bad taste in not yielding to the referee's decision. At any rate they broke faith with the public, who had paid their admission fee to see the match played out. One disgusted individual suggested that they be renamed the "Kickers" instead of the "Checkers."

A Splendid Chance.

It will be seen by an advertisement in another column that Mr. D. W Dumble offers for sale a number of Building Lots in various parts of the town on ten years credit. No money down, interest only to be paid for first five years, and thereafter yearly instalments with the right to pay at any time as may suit the convenience of the purchaser. This offer enables a poor man to use his money in erecting a building, and so he gets rid of rent, and secures a home for himself. Building will be cheap this year and no doubt many will take advantage of this very liberal offer. Besides lots in town, Mr. Dumble offers a number of lots in Ashburnham, and several park lots on the same terms. Call at his office and see plans, &c.

THE BOUNDARY AWARD.

Hon. Mr. Mills' Account of the Proceedings of the Privy Council.

Hon. David Mills, who accompanied Hon. Mr. Mowat to England to enlist him in watching the interests of Ontario in the disputed boundary case, has written a long letter to the London Advertiser. From this letter we make a few extracts which will give our readers a clearer idea and understanding of the matter. Mr. Mills says:

"The case was a long one. The discussion before the Committee of the Privy Council occupied six days. The greater portion of this time was occupied by the presentation of the case on the behalf of Manitoba and of the Dominion. It was well for the Province of Ontario that the other side thought it necessary to go into so full and exhaustive a discussion of the whole subject, as in no other way was it possible to exhibit with so much clearness the progressive character of the pretensions of the Dominion. The counsel for Manitoba and for the Dominion took their stand upon the old ground occupied by the Hudson's Bay Company—that the charter of the Company declared the extent of the country which was ceded, and that it was not open to Ontario to contest those points since, especially as the Government of the United Kingdom had on behalf of the Crown and of the Company made similar claims while Canada was in the possession of the French. But the more this pretension was discussed the more apparent was it that it was a position which could not be upheld, and which was at total variance with the general principles of negotiation which the English Government since the days of Queen Elizabeth recognized in the extension of the British Empire."

After historically reviewing the case, Hon. Mr. Mills submits the following digest of the proceedings which are of importance enough to admit of their being given in extenso. He says:

"Our readers are aware that the Province of Quebec extended southward to the Ohio, and westward to the Mississippi. The Government of Canada claimed that the westward limit of the Province of Quebec was a line drawn due north from the junction of the Ohio and the Mississippi. The Government of Ontario maintained that the westerly limit followed the Mississippi to its source. The Privy Council in the construction given to the act by the Province of Ontario. The object of the enlargement of the Province by the Act of 1774 was declared to be for the purpose of embracing the French colonies and settlements, and as a very large number of these would be excluded by a due north line, the Committee refused to put such a construction upon the Act as would defeat its declared purpose. The people in the Illinois country were told by Lord Dartmouth that they were to be included in the Province of Quebec before the bill was introduced, and that it was the intention of the Imperial Act to introduce the measure for that purpose, and as all the people of the Illinois country lived west of the due north line, it is clear that such a line was never contemplated by the Government. Then the commission of Sir Guy Carleton declared that the western boundary followed the Mississippi to its source, and then extended northward to the possessions of the Hudson Bay Company. After the country south of the lakes was ceded to the United States the next commission extended the southern boundary of Quebec along the international boundary to the north-west angle of the Lake of the Woods, and again northward to the Hudson Bay Company's possessions. When the Province was divided the separating line was extended northward to the boundary line of the Hudson Bay, which many of the commissions interpreted by using the words "shores of Hudson Bay," so that Ontario had as her south-western angle the north-west angle of the Lake of the Woods, and as her north-eastern angle the shores of Hudson Bay. Between these points the French had many posts, and the Hudson Bay Company had two—the Moose Fort and the Albany—both of which had been ceded to the French by the treaty of Ryswick, and which, although restored to them by the treaty of Utrecht, could not revive any right of property under the charter in that section. The Lord Chancellor observed that a paper had been presented to Parliament to extend the separating line between the Provinces northward to the territory granted to the Hudson Bay, that this description had been deliberately rejected, and another form of expression used, namely, the boundary line of the Hudson Bay. This expression had received interpretation in the commissions of Lord Durham and other Governors. The Privy Council the notion that the height of land was the boundary of the Province of Ontario upon the north, and it is difficult to conceive how, looking at all the facts, such a boundary could be upheld. Land heights may serve as boundaries where they rise into lofty mountain ranges, and so form a distinct boundary between one continent and another. In such a case the height of land, like a river, becomes the natural boundary, but where the height of land is an almost imperceptible elevation, when it spreads out into a broad tableland of 100 miles in width, overspread with lakes and rivers which interlace with each other, so that canoemen and traders pass readily from the rivers on the one side to those of the other, it is clear that such a land height in no way becomes a suitable boundary marked out by nature for separating the territories of one State from those of another, and this the Privy Council did not fail to perceive. The French trading posts on one side of the height of land frequently embraced a large extent of the territory upon the other. It was also observed that in the union between the Hudson Bay Company and the North-West Company the posts on the shore of the bay and to the north of the Albany River were called the posts of the southern department, which showed that in the country between the Albany River and the lakes they had as yet no trading posts. The country was still in the possession for the purpose of trade of those who had become the inheritors of the French traders. The Privy Council on these grounds, which I have here briefly indicated, held that the old Province of Quebec under the act of 1774 extended west to the Mississippi and southward to the Ohio; that after 1783 it extended southward to the international boundary, and westward as far as the north-west angle of the Lake of the Woods; that it was never bounded on the north, either by the hight of land or by the 49th parallel; that it extended to the shore of the Hudson Bay. But they at the same time intimated that in their advice to Her Majesty they would not feel called upon to go beyond the order of reference. Mr. Robinson intimated in the course of his argument that the Government did not want either a conventional boundary or a convenient boundary. What they wanted was that should be delared, and that anything else might not be satisfactory. The Lord Chancellor observed that the evidence might not amount to demonstrative evidence as to where the boundary should be drawn at all points, and he said: "We may at certain points clearly ascertain the north-western boundary and the north-eastern boundary, but the intermediate boundary may not be so easily ascertained. Are we not to do anything?

Mr. Robinson—It is not for me to say.

Lord Chancellor—You just say reasonable what I thought it came to, but of course that we were only to find the true boundary. Are we not to exercise any power of giving or suggesting like that if it was clear that we should adopt any difficulty in ascertaining the true boundary?

Further on Mr. Robinson suggested whether an Act of the Imperial Parliament might be necessary to give effect to the views of the Committee. The Lord Chancellor observed:—"I suppose nothing but Imperial legislation would be satisfactory to either party, because it is most manifest that if no Imperial legislation is obtained the same thing would happen over again which happened in the case of the award—the party who did not like the conclusion would say that he was not bound by it."

Mr. Robinson—I do not think there is this objection. Lord Chancellor—[illegible] plan—I suppose in fact, has been [illegible] before which [illegible]

So the award, in fact, has been [illegible]

The Privy Council have since [illegible] conclusion as that to which the arbitrators arrived. They have considered that the extent of territory as far west as the source of the Mississippi River to which Ontario will make claim is to be determined by what will be done on this principle and not by the limits laid in the English or French charters. When Mr. McCarthy was opposing [illegible] provisions of the award of the arbitrators [illegible] layer of the extension of [illegible] necessary to fill the [illegible] rivers which [illegible] said:—"The Mississippi has [illegible] united the Crown of [illegible] purported to give them [illegible] drained into the bay. Now, [illegible] void through uncertainty, and [illegible] paper, which I am not required to [illegible] or it did give to the Company certain [illegible] Where are these limits? Can my friends on the other side suggest any definite limit of the Hudson Bay Company's grant?"

Sir Robert Collier—I thought you were trying to suggest some line that they had [illegible] ently of charter.

Mr. McCarthy—No, my Lord.

Sir Robert Collier—Then we come back to the charter and we have your views on that.

Lord Aberdare—Would you argue that although the French may have possessed [illegible] west of the source of the Mississippi, [illegible] to the Indians, and [illegible] may say, and have possession of it by [illegible] against the charter claims of the company?

Mr. McCarthy—Precisely.

Lord Aberdare—You assume that even if the evidence showed, as it does, that a large part of the territory granted by the arbitrators to Ontario, the watershed toward the Hudson Bay had been occupied by the French for 50, 75, or 100 years, that would avail nothing the Hudson Bay Company under their charter.

Mr. McCarthy—Yes, my Lord, that is my proposition.

Lord Chancellor—It is really a proposition which, if anything at all, is the most extraordinary one imaginable. The French get access to the country which is drained at a certain point by the St Lawrence. They push their settlement into the interior of the country and do not meet there with any other settlement of any other nation whatever. According to your argument they might organize these settlements in the most civilized manner, and build towns and villages, and cultivate the land, but because King Charles II. had granted, 100 or 50 years before, a charter to some of his subjects, which in the terms of it, as you say, when construed on certain principles, would include part of the territory which the French had so settled therefore internationally the grantees of Charles II. have a right to turn out the French settlers.

Mr. McCarthy—Yes.

Lord Chancellor—It is perfectly absurd.

Readers will see from this brief statement of the discussion before the Privy Council, and of the conclusion which has been reached, that the controversy so far as it has been submitted to them has been most satisfactorily disposed of. Whether the Dominion Government, after the clear and distinct opinions which have been intimated, will stand in the way of imperial legislation, I cannot say, but it is most desirable that when the Imperial Parliament deal with the subject they should deal with the whole boundary, and not simply with that portion in which Manitoba is interested.

ADDRESS AND PRESENTATION.

On Saturday evening last, several of the friends of Mr. Robert Weir, late superintendent of the Murray street Bible Christian Sunday School, wishing to mark becomingly the cessation of Mr. Weir's duties as such, consequent on the union of the Methodist bodies, met and presented that gentlemen with a beautiful illustrated family Bible, with the following address, read by Mr. J. Richardson, while the presentation was made by Mr. F. Brownscombe.

ADDRESS.

MR. ROBERT WEIR:—

Dear Sir:—In view of the fact that the Bible Christian Sabbath School, Peterborough, has been closed, we the Officers and Teachers of the above School desire to show our appreciation of your services so efficiently rendered for a period of over twenty years as superintendant and teacher.

We avail ourselves of this opportunity of presenting you with this copy of the Holy Bible as a token of our esteem and respect.

We earnestly pray that you may be spared to promote the spread of those truths which this Blessed Volume contains.

Signed on behalf of the school by

W. G. YELLAND, Superintendent. T. EDWARD PRATT, Secretary.

To this address Mr. Weir read the following:—

REPLY.

To W. G. Yelland, Superintendent, and T. Ed. Pratt, Secretary:

Dear friends, I cannot express the pleasure I feel in receiving this address just presented to me and in the receipt of this beautiful Bible. The address I will treasure for the expressions of Christian love and Charity it contains. The Bible I will keep in remembrance, if anything was needed, to remind me of your kindness and respect. You have been pleased to make mention of my long service as teacher and superintendent, which service has been for a period of over twenty years. In reply to this I can only say I have endeavoured to do my duty as a Christian. I sincerely thank you for the prayers and good wishes you have expressed in this address and for the beautiful gift you have been pleased to bestow and also for the disinterested kindness and support I have always received from Officers and teachers of the school.

Believe me yours in the Lord,

ROBERT WEIR,
Late Superintendent of B. C. S. S.

We have had very favourable weather for gathering our hay, which was a very fair crop. Grain promises a fair yield.

An Indian near here has captured a young moose, which he has converted into a pet.

INDISCRETIONS IN DIET bring on dyspepsia and irregularity of the bowels. Eat only wholesome food, and if the trouble has become permanent—as it is very prone to do—try a course of Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyspeptic Cure. The combined effects astonish and delight the sufferer, who soon begins to digest well, regain functional regularity and improve in appetite; the blood becomes pure, and good health is restored.

Our New Watchmaker, Mr. Hughan, comes well recommended, and we are sure say work entrusted to him will be done in good style. Office lately occupied by Miss Barnham, Simcoe Steet. 18-tf

MIDLAND DISTRICT DASHES.

The Cream of Occurrences Skimmed From Contemporary Columns.

PONTYPOOL.

Mr. John Carveth, of Leakard, is building a new elevator at Pontypool, on the O. & Q., which will be one of the finest in the country.

EMILY.

Mr. Laidley, who lives in Lindsay and has a farm on the border of Emily in the Blackwell neighborhood, lost three cows last week by means of paris green. Mr. Laidley had been sprinkling some of the poison on the potatoes in a field adjoining the pasture, and left the package on a rail of the fence. It is supposed that the paris green was knocked down from the fence to the ground, and that a part of it fell on the grass and was eaten by the cows.

PORT PERRY.

The Midland Railway has consented to give special rates to builders, with a view of assisting in pushing the work of rebuilding Port Perry. They will haul car-load lots of lumber from Peterborough at 6 cents per 100 lbs.; from Waubashene, Orillia and Midland at 8 cents per 100 lbs. Brick from Port Hope, Beaverton and Lindsay will be delivered at 6 cents per 100 lbs. On the above rates a rebate of 15 per cent. will also be allowed.

OMEMEE.

One of our oldest citizens has passed away in the person of Mr. S. Cottingham, who died on Tuesday morning, at the advanced age of eighty years. For years Mr. Cottingham has been failing in health and strength and unable to leave his home or take active exercise. On Wednesday he was buried in the cemetery, a large funeral following the remains. Great sympathy is felt for Mrs. Cottingham in her bereavement, especially as her son, Mr. W. S. Cottingham, living in the North-West, was unable to attend the funeral.

CAMPBELLFORD.

Some of the farmers of Seymour are rejoicing over wheat fields which will bring from 30 to 40 bushels to the acre. A farmer of Brighton township threshed 40 bushels to the acre last week; and Mr. H. Rose, of Seymour, will show up something of equal growth from a field which he is now harvesting.

The cheese factories of our township, says the Herald, are panning out well. Contract price is now 11½ cents. As $90,000 comes into our township annually from this branch of farming industry, the importance of it cannot be overlooked.

On Sunday afternoon last Robert McNaughton, with some other young fellows, went into the river near the paper mill for a bath. The poor lad stumbled over the edge of the rock into deep water, and not being able to swim was drowned. The body was carried by the current down stream and caught by a projecting rock, from whence it was recovered, but too late to restore life.

LINDSAY.

Mr. Thomas Gladman called at Lindsay on his way home from Moose Fort, Hudson's Bay. He made the trip from Lake Superior to Hudson's Bay in a Peterboro canoe.

The directors of the Lindsay Central, with an eye to providing an attraction that should draw the younger portion of the community, have arranged for a grand bicycle parade and exhibition to be given by sixteen members of the "Wanderers" club of Toronto. The exhibition will take place on the first day of the show.

A proposition has been made by the directors of the Lindsay central fair to the owner of some property adjoining the grounds to buy of it about two and one-half acres. If the purchase is made, with a view of completing which a special meeting of the directors will be held, it is proposed to take down and remove the line of stables off the south side of the present ground. The stables will be put up on the west side, and additional fencing put around the extended grounds. The addition will give a splendid half-mile track and allow of the speeding in the ring being made a more successful feature of the fair than it was last year. Upon making the change other improvements will be made in the premises looking to a better handling of the live stock. Further particulars will be given after the directors' meeting is held.

PORT HOPE.

The fine and fees at the Police Court for the month of July amounted to $178.50.

On Monday a one hundred yards race, for $25 a side, took place at the Park, between Geo. Hudson, of Oshawa, and Fred Hunt, of Port Perry. Hunt got three yards start and won by one yard.

Bishop Jamot, of Peterborough, said high mass at St. Mary's R. C. Church, on Sunday morning. He informed the congregation that Rev. Father Brown would again take possession of the parish after a few months' holidays.

The Oddfellows and the Sons of England of Port Hope have extended a cordial invitation to the Canadian Oddfellows of Toronto to visit them on Civic Holiday, the 18th of August.

Capt. Henning is getting a reputation for fleetness of foot nearly equal to Hamly. He tried his wind for a hundred yards with Robson, a noted athlete, and distanced him. The referees were J. A. Brown and John McMullen.

A sad and distressing accident occurred on the Grand Trunk Railway, near Bowmanville station, whereby William J. R. Gamble, eldest son of Mr. John Gamble, market clerk, lost his life. The boy left home in the morning, intending to go to Whitby to attend the civic holiday. Nothing further was heard of him until Mr. Gamble received information that his son had been run over by the train and was severely injured. It appears that Mrs Ogden Smith was passing near the Bowmanville station when she saw young Gamble lying [illegible] She sent a message of her to give him [illegible] afterwards told him that his parents were, and that if his mother heard of the accident it would kill her. The boy asked Mrs. Smith to send for his father, and the poor fellow was then taken to the luggage room at the station, and three doctors were soon in attendance, but could do nothing for him. He was removed to the hotel near the station, accompanied by Mrs. Smith. In explaining how the accident happened, he said he went to buy a ticket at Bowmanville to go to Whitby to see the firemen's procession, but they would not give him one, as there was no passenger train going then; he then tried to jump on a flat car, but missed his footing and fell against the car and partly on it, but could not hold on, so he fell and the wheels passed over both legs, cutting one clean off at the knee, the other above the ankle, and badly crushing the leg. He soon died.

BOBCAYGEON.

The little Bob annual Outing is to take place on August 20th. Oak Orchard is mentioned as the rendezvous, and as it is two years since the Little Bob people took a holiday of their own, they are looking forward to something extra in the way of jaunts.

The summer business is now at its height. The Rockland, Commercial, and Forest Homes, are constantly exerting their utmost ingenuity in stowing away the relays of guests. Our hotels are equal to any town, but their capacity for the summer business is quite insufficient.

The ceremony of christening the new steamer, built by M. Boyd & Co., for the Trent Valley Navigation Company service, was celebrated with great eclat, on Thursday afternoon. The boat has been planned and built expressly for the passenger traffic, and is finished throughout from keel to pennant with all the latest improvements. Her length is 96 ft, breadth of beam 17 ft. The model is of clean fine cut, and good bearings. The boiler is one of the best that money can obtain, being one of the latest improved steel marine boilers. The fittings of the machinery is most creditable to the skill of the engineer, Mr. Thomas Marshall. The general saloon is finished in natural woods, black ash, and bird's eye maple predominating, whilst the upholstery is of rich plush. The ladies have a special cabin, furnished similar to the general saloon, with a boudoir attachment, and the Captain, Purser, and crew each have comfortable state rooms. She is called the Esturion.

COUNCIL MEETING.

The Harvey Council met at the Clerk's office on Monday, 4th August, 1884. Members all present.

LARGE EXPORT OF CHEESE.

Up to August 2nd the season's export of cheese from Montreal is unprecedentedly large—reaching the total of nearly half a million boxes. The following shows the number of boxes exported from Montreal up to the same date, in the years named:—

1879	231,407
1880	226,104
1881	270,865
1882	303,069
1884	497,632

It thus appeared that in five years the export of cheese has more than doubled. The Montreal Gazette says: "The make has been well sold up and factorymen have wisely kept their shelves clear, and prices have been satisfactory. The market price for finest to-day is 10 cents, whereas at this time last year 9½ cents was the best obtainable. The export movement of butter tells a very different story. To date the exports this year are 8,581 packages, an increase of 315 over 1883, but a decrease of 1,943 as compared with 1882, of 21,636 from 1881, of 46,684 from 1880, and of 20,923 from 1879."

WHAT HE SAID.

'How many of your parent, children, say grace?' asked the Sunday-school teacher.

'Please, mum, what's them?' asked an overgrown girl in a last year's hat.

'Why, Maggie!' exclaimed the teacher, 'is it possible you don't known, what grace is? Doesn't your father say something before you began to eat?'

'Oh!' responded the girl, with a glow of intelligence; 'yes, mum, he always says, 'Don't make hogs of yourself; that's all the butter there is in the house.

WHY MARY WEPT.

Mary—"Yes, I have half my last piece." Sarah—"An' what did you have for?"

"The mistress was too hard-hearted. She had no more sensibilities than an ox."

"An' did she abuse you, dearie?"

"Indade she did that."

"An' what did she do?"

"She put an alarum clock right in my room, an' in the morning it made such a noise I cud not slape another wink."

"I marry that fellow, ma!" exclaimed Nellie. "No, I would rather die than have him. What I marry him with all his pains and aches. Never; not till he tries Crowfoot Bitters."

REPRESENTED.

A French priest, who had usually a small congregation, was one day preaching at a church in his village, when, the doors being open, a gander an several geese came stalking up the middle aisle. The preacher, availing himself of the circumstance, observed that he could no longer find fault with the people of the district for non-attendance, because though they did not come themselves, they sent their representatives.

Miss Mary Campbell, Elm, writes: "After taking four bottles of Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyspeptic Cure, I feel as if I were a new person. I had been troubled with Dyspepsia for a number of years, and tried many remedies, but of no avail, until I used this celebrated Dyspeptic Cure." "Well, that ought not to make you feel very much distressed. You are his heir, aren't you?"

"Yes, but you see the despatch states hopes are entertained of his recovery."

HE DIDN'T CHIRRUP.

An Irishman tried to shoot a sparrow with an old musket. He fired. The bird, with a chirrup or two, flew away unconcerned in in the foreground, and Pat was swiftly and noiselessly laid on his spine in the background. Picking himself up and shaking his fist at the bird, he exclaimed:

'Be jabers, ye wouldn't a chirruped if you'd been at this end of the gun!'

CHOLERA
COMING!

The countries where Cholera prevails, as in India, China and Africa, Pain-Killer is considered the surest and safest of all known remedies, and the natives place the most perfect reliance in it.

Read the following extract from the letter of a missionary in China:

DEAR SIRS:—I ought to have acknowledged long ago the box of Pain-Killer you had the goodness to send me last year. Its coming was most providential. I believe hundreds of lives were saved, under God, by it. The Cholera appeared here soon after we received it. We resorted at once to the Pain-Killer, using as directed for Cholera. A list was kept of all to whom the Pain-Killer was given, and our native assistants assured us that eight out of every ten to whom it was prescribed, recovered.

Believe me, dear sirs, gratefully and faithfully yours.

AYER'S Hair Vigor

restores, with the gloss and freshness of youth, faded or gray hair to a natural, rich brown color, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use light or red hair may be darkened, thin hair thickened, and baldness often, though not always, cured.

It checks falling of the hair, and stimulates a weak and sickly growth to vigor. It prevents and cures scurf and dandruff, and heals nearly every disease peculiar to the scalp. As a Ladies' Hair Dressing, the VIGOR is unequalled; it contains neither oil nor dye, renders the hair soft, glossy, and silken in appearance, and imparts a delicate, agreeable, and lasting perfume.

MR. C. P. BRICHER writes from Kirby, O., July 3, 1883: "Last fall my hair commenced falling out, and in a short time I became nearly bald. I used part of a bottle of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR, which stopped the falling of the hair, and started a new growth. I have now a full head of hair growing vigorously, and am convinced that but for the use of your preparation I should have been entirely bald."

J. W. BOWEN, proprietor of the McArthur (Ohio) Enquirer, says: "AYER'S HAIR VIGOR is a most excellent preparation for the hair. I speak of it from my own experience. Its use promotes the growth of new hair, and makes it glossy and soft. The VIGOR is also a sure cure for dandruff. Not within my knowledge has the preparation ever failed to give entire satisfaction."

MR. ANGUS FAIRBAIRN, leader of the celebrated "Fairbairn Family" of Scottish Vocalists, writes from Boston, Mass., Feb. 6, 1880: "Ever since my hair began to give all very evidence of the change which fleeting time procureth, I have used AYER'S HAIR VIGOR, and so have been able to maintain an appearance of youthfulness—a matter of considerable consequence to ministers, orators, actors, and in fact every one who lives in the eyes of the public."

MRS. O. A. PRESCOTT, writing from 18 Elm St., Charlestown, Mass., April 14, 1882, says: "Two years ago about two-thirds of my hair came off. It thinned very rapidly, and I was fast growing bald. On using AYER'S HAIR VIGOR the falling stopped and a new growth commenced, and in about a month my head was completely covered with short hair. It has continued to grow, and is now as good as before it fell. I regularly used but one bottle of the VIGOR, but now use it occasionally as a dressing."

We have hundreds of similar testimonials to the efficacy of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR. It needs but a trial to convince the most skeptical of its value.

General Toombs refused to subscribe for the purchase of Alexander H. Stephens' residence as a memorial hall, "because," he said, "I want the people of Georgia to buy the property, and when they do I will endow it with enough to make it such a college as little Alcok would like to see if he were alive."

The first cotton exported from American was a lot of eight bags sent to Liverpool just 100 years ago, and the customs authorities detained it awhile because it was reckoned impossible that so much could have been raised here. The crop last year amounted to 6,949,756 bales, of which 4,766,597 were exported.

Old Bible Text.

I paid a visit to-day to Dr. Harkavy of the Imperial Library, whose recent discovery of a supposed ancient text of the Old Testament is exciting much interest in scientific and even general circles, says a St. Petersburg dispatch to the London Standard. The learned professor informed me that the manuscripts in question had been in his possession for some months, but that he had refrained from bringing them to public notice on account of the recent exposure of the Shapira frauds, and the scepticism with which a new specimen which in the field of discovery would necessarily be received. His scruples were overcome, however, by the persuasions of his friend, Mr. Neubauer, the assistant librarian at the Bodleian Library at Oxford, and he has prepared a short statement for publication pending the production of a memoir upon which he will set to work after Easter.

Assuming that the manuscripts are genuine (and as to this the doctor has no doubt), he has already deciphered enough to prove that they are of very considerable antiquity, but he is unable to fix even an approximate date for them as yet, nor has he met with any important variations from the textus receptus. The manuscripts are the property of persons whom the Professor is not at liberty to name, the manuscripts having been intrusted to him merely to decipher. Their present owners bought them at one of the Black Sea ports from a Greek sailor sailing from the Island of Rhodes. They consist of some thirty rolls of vellum, which were probably once bound together. Some, however, are much better preserved than others. The "Lamentations" of Jeremiah, for instance, are comparatively fresh and easily read, while some of the parchment is so wrinkled and discolored that nothing can be made out, though the Professor hopes by means of reagents to render the writing legible. The "Book of Lamentations" is followed by an original poem on the same subject, "The Fall of Jerusalem," signed, "Jacob, the son of Isaac." The other books which Prof. Harkavy has made out so far are the prophecies of Hosea, Joel, Obadiah, Haggai, and Zachariah, and the books of Ruth, Esther, Daniel and Zephaniah.

The most puzzling feature is that the characters employed differ materially from all hitherto known, so much so that those who read with facility the square writing of the other Hebrew texts are at a loss to understand it. Dr. Harkavy pointed out instances in which the letter Lamed is nearly the same as the Yemen character; whilst the letter Ain is quite original, being like the Greek Epsilon written backward.

Judging from what he has made up to the present time, the professor thinks the manuscript must have originated with a colony of Jews long isolated from their fellow-countrymen, probably some island or out of the way spot on the coast of Arabia.

He Took Water.

A bill collector's life is not a happy one. On Saturday last a gentleman while passing along Fourth street was startled by a man all water-soaked and muddy leaping over the fence by his side and at the same time hearing the sound of devilry issuing from the rear of the premises. The water-soaked individual was evidently in a great hurry to meet a very pressing engagement, and yet at the same time there was a sort of anxious look on his face; a look that would lead one to suppose he had been fooling with a steam fire engine and didn't know it was loaded. Yes, he was anxious to get "anywhere but there" and the-I-wish-I-hadn't-called expression on his face plainly indicated that he was glad to escape with his life, even if his water-soaked clothes did give him the appearance of a mop on scrubbing day. "What's the matter?" anxiously inquired the startled gentleman, "you haven't run into a water spout or cloud-burst have you?"

"Don't detain me a minute," answered the wet man. "I wouldn't have that woman get within forty feet of me again for anything. Let me pass."

"You're excited, man, you——"

"Excited!" exclaimed the damp individual, "I should say I was excited. Who wouldn't be excited to have a two hundred pound woman chasing them with a hose with a two inch nozzle? I went in there to collect a bill. The woman appeared glad to see me. We used to be rather spooney until I went into a business she didn't like. She used to say she'd kill a bill collector some day, an' I believe she will. As I said, she appeared glad to see me, and we talked of old times for a while. Finally, realizing that time was money, I handed her a bill for provisions. 'That's all right,' she said and then asked me to come around to the back door and she would pay me. I went. I no more than got around the corner of the house than a stream of water took me in the ear and dumped me into a new made onion bed. Before I could get up she had the stream squirting all over me, and splashing mud on me. I managed to get up on my feet and made a break for the street, but I lost my hat in the rumpus. She can have that. I don't care to go for it. It's the first time I was ever made to take water. Do you hear that?" exclaimed the man, as a laugh was heard coming from the same direction he had, and taking the middle of the road the water-soaked collector proceeded to make a record for fast time that would make Jay-Eye-See green with envy—Peck's Sun.

Returned From Liberia.

Maria Rouse, an aged negress from Liberia, was cared for at the Atlanta, Ga., city prison the other night. She left Alabama in 1878 with a party of seventy-six negroes for Liberia. Most of them died with fever after getting there, only two have ever been able to get back to America, and only ten of the party survive in Liberia. For six years the old woman had been trying to save money to get back to Alabama. Negroes over there, she says, are not paid over $3 a month for work. She says they can hardly work for the jigger flea, an insect which burrows under the skin of the feet, lives and breeds there, and literally eats the feet up. She saw many who had their feet cut off, as the flea can not be removed when once they burrow under the skin, making horrible sores. She had saved $50 in six years, which paid her passage to New York, leaving a few dollars over.

Said one young lady: "I just know we are going to be washed out again, and pa is as stubborn as he was last year. He stuck to it that the water wouldn't come into the house, and dug a ditch through the yard to carry it off if it crossed Fulton street, but when he got out of bed into water a foot deep on the floor about midnight he didn't say a word about the ditch."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Writer and the Writing.

It has before now been suggested, we believe, that literature [illegible] most of the professions, is getting somewhat overcrowded, and that literary men are having rather a hard time in consequence. Even those who are reasonable enough to admit that as compared with the condition of the members of the guild abroad, American wielders of the pen have reason to be tolerably well content, are prepared to take a pessimistic view of the present state of things, and still more to lament the obvious tendency of the times. The general stringency of the season is allowed to have some influence, and some stress is also laid upon its being presidential year; but far more effective causes than either of these are supposed to be the flood of foreign reprints, the abundance of cheap pirated editions, and the increasing difficulty of making a reputation.

The last of these objections may be dismissed at once as arrant nonsense. It never was easier to make a reputation than it is to-day, or on more slender capital, as witness Mr. F. Marion Crawford. For another, it is to be noted that cheap editions are not wholly devastating the land. The Seaside Library has come utterly to grief and been discontinued; and while it is undoubtedly true that pirated editions injure immensely the sale of American books, the fact remains that magazine prices in this country are still the best in the world, and New York has just witnessed the establishment of a series of American novels and one of American short stories, both of which are understood to be doing well. As for business depression, it is to be expected that literature should take its chance with the rest of the professions, and while it feels dull times more than some, it is, on the contrary, less affected than others.

The simple fact of the whole matter is that public attention is absorbed by the newspaper; and it is to the periodical press that the literary man owes both his salvation and his ruin. The large class of people who read simply to kill time satisfy all literary cravings by drinking at the streams, clear or muddy, as the case may be, of their pet newspapers; and even the lighter class of stories appeal to them but seldom unless served up in long columns and sent through the post office. It is emphatically the age of the newspaper, and both author and preacher are rapidly finding themselves reduced to the choice between working for the periodical press and abandoning the field altogether. Of course, there are striking exceptions, but in the main this seems to us to be about the sense and substance of the whole matter. Literary men are as well off as ever, but they must adapt their methods of work to the times in which they live.—Boston Courier.

John B. Gough, now sixty-seven, came from England to New York in 1820, learned the book binder's trade, and for several years was chiefly distinguished for getting drunk, singing songs and giving recitations. He became a temperance advocate in 1840, making his first speech in the old Broadway Tabernacle.

The standard railroad time, according to W. F. Allen, the originator of the system, is now in use by all the railroads in the country except the Union Division of the Union Pacific, the Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific, west of Deming, N. M. Less than 10 per cent. of the people of the country are using local time.

The latest venture in the newspaper line is the proposed republication in America from electrotype plates of the London Illustrated News, with a twelve page American supplement. The scheme is shortly to be projected, and by the terms of the arrangement the London publishers will send none of the English edition to this country.

The death rate of Russia is the highest in Europe. This is attributed to the paucity of medical men and the habits of the rural population. According to the rate returns the average duration of life is only twenty-six years, and the mortality among infants is frightful. More than 50 per cent. of infants die before they reach their fifth year, and nearly 2,000,000 children perish each year.

A correspondent of the Boston Herald thinks that the time has come for Queen Victoria to abdicate in favor of the Prince of Wales. "She is, and has been," he says, "for many years only a figure head to the nation, while he does all the work, goes among the people, and interests himself in public affairs, showing great public spirit and liberal views on all occasions. As a soldier, as a huntsman, as a royal personage and as a true-hearted gentleman, the Prince of Wales has to day no superior in all Great Britain. My views of him are now completely revolutionized, for I see him wherever I go, mingling with the people, and even lately prowling around the slums in order to improve the condition of the wretched London poor. Deeds, not words, are what tell in a man's life record, and the prejudices which once existed regarding him are being battered down, and that, too, by his own unostentatious conduct. And his position in the country is rather trying when one reflects on it. For he is not absolute King, while he has to act King practically, as it is impossible for him to shine as a quiet English gentleman."

Alexander Dumas, like Ernest Renan, his contemporary, has found life enjoyable, and for the past fifteen years he says he has been the happiest man alive. "Can you imagine," he remarks, "a greater happiness than a persistent love of labor, the desire to be useful, the entire possession of one's faculties, and control of his will and conscience; admiration for what is fine, indulgence for the silly, and severity for one's self? The happiness of which I boast is made up of these things. You would hardly have guessed it. It's a question of age and surroundings. If you but realized, my young friend, how, when once you get into this order of ideas, everything is simplified, and what repose, balance and happiness you may find! As you get advanced in life, I hope that you may be able to realize these things. About that time you will realise that the earth and all it contains, even including naturalism, is diminishing, diminishing, fading away! One day you will take it in your hand, as a child takes a ball, and, after having weighed it lightly, then you will cast it from you, saying: 'Really, it is too small; there must be something larger than that!'"

The Prince of Wales takes much active interest in agriculture, and is almost invariably to be seen at agricultural meetings, says an English exchange. He is a competent authority on the sowing of wild oats if experience teaches a man anything.

KING'S EVIL

Was the name formerly given to Scrofula because of a superstition that it could be cured by a king's touch. The world is wiser now, and knows that can only be cured by a thorough purification of the blood. If this is neglected, the disease perpetuates its taint through generation after generation. Among its earlier symptomatic developments are Humors, Cutaneous Eruptions, Tumors, Boils, Carbuncles, Erysipelas, Purulent Ulcers, Nervous and Physical Collapse, etc. If allowed to continue, Rheumatism, Scrofulous Catarrh, Kidney and Liver Diseases, Tubercular Consumption, and various other dangerous or fatal maladies, are produced by it.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

Is the only powerful and always reliable blood-purifying medicine. It is so effectual an alterative that it eradicates from the system Hereditary Scrofula, and the kindred poisons of contagious diseases and mercury. At the same time it enriches and vitalizes the blood, restoring healthful action to the vital organs and rejuvenating the entire system. This great

Regenerative Medicine

Is composed of the genuine Honduras Sarsaparilla, with Yellow Dock, Stillingia, the Iodides of Potassium and Iron, and other ingredients of great potency, carefully and scientifically compounded. Its formula is generally known to the medical profession, and the best physicians constantly prescribe AYER'S SARSAPARILLA as an

Absolute Cure

For all diseases caused by the vitiation of the blood. It is concentrated to the highest practicable degree, far beyond any other preparation for which like effects are claimed, and is therefore the cheapest, as well as the best blood purifying medicine, in the world.

Peterborough Examiner.

PETERBOROUGH, AUGUST 14, 1884.

Mr. Mowat or Mr. Meredith.

Our Conservative contemporaries, with an assurance that is astounding, even for them, make the claim that Mr. William Ralph Meredith, as one enthusiastic special pleader, puts him (in capital letters too), is the "real victor" in the boundary matter, and that the double faced leader of the Ontario opposition is the real friend of Ontario, in t matter which Mr. Mowat has just brought to a triumphant conclusion, on behalf of the Province of Ontario. To show that Mr. Meredith is not in the least deserving of the claim so fatuously made for him, will not require two or three columns of special pleading. The facts are simply these: The Award of the Arbitrators, giving Ontario the territory which the decision of the Privy council has recently confirmed, was made August 30th, 1878. In the following session of the Ontario Legislature, an act to give effect to the award as far as Ontario was concerned, was passed, but the Dominion Parliament took no corresponding action. On March 3rd, 1880, a resolution was introduced into the Ontario Legislature declaring that "this House regrets, that notwithstanding the joint and concurrent action of the respective governments in the premises, and the unanimous award of the Arbitrators, the Government of Canada has failed to recognise the validity of the award * * * and that it is the duty of the Government of Ontario to take such steps as may be necessary to provide for the administration of justice in the northerly and north-westerly parts of Ontario * * * That this House will at all times give its cordial support to the assertion of the just claims and rights of this province and to all necessary measures to vindicate such just claims and rights and to sustain the award of the Arbitrators." For this resolution Mr. Meredith and his entire following, with a single exception, voted. On the third of March, 1881, Mr. Meredith and his following voted for a resolution to sustain the award. Thus Mr. Meredith committed himself to the award, recognising it as giving Ontario her rights. But Mr. Meredith, who up to this time acted as the friend of Ontario and the champion of her rights, and was, as far as his power and influence went, entitled to the credit of desiring and seeking justice for this Province, took a sudden change. On March 18th, 1881, Sir John's complication bill, ceding to Manitoba a huge slice of Ontario limits, was passed. In January, 1882, Sir John, moved thereto by the bulldosing and threats of his Quebec supporters, and having made up his mind to repudiate the award, officially apprised the Ontario Government to that effect. Here was Mr. Meredith's chance to stick to Ontario, but instead of that, influenced, no doubt, by the instructions of his master at Ottawa, Sir John, Mr. Meredith turned against Ontario and stultified himself by ignoring his doubly-expressed belief in the validity of the award, and breaking his double pledge to help maintain it. Mr. Meredith moved, and Mr. Morris seconded the resolution dictated by Sir John, the enemy of Ontario. The resolution involved the recommendation of the abandonment of the award and an appeal to the Privy Council. This appeal was no new thing. Mr. Mowat was ready to refer the matter to the Privy Council, but subject, of course, to the condition of retaining possession of and jurisdiction over the territory, to which the award had given this Province a prima facie claim. He was too wise, too patriotic, to yield the advantage he already had. Did Mr. Meredith assist him in this? Not by any means. He, instead, joined issue with Sir John, who claimed that the "due north" line and the "height of land" were to the western and northern boundaries of Ontario, limits that would deprive Ontario of thousands of square miles of territory, which the award and the Privy Council have given her. Was there any particular patriotism in this on Mr. Meredith's part? If he were so anxious for a reference to the Privy Council, why did he not, as a friend of this Province, urge it on Mr. Mowat's conditions, possession of the territory in the meantime? But that would not suit Mr. Meredith's book—Sir John would not allow that; he wanted to use the territory for giving timber privileges to his supporters and hirelings, and Mr. Meredith gave his approval and assistance. If he had wished to prove himself the friend of this Province, why did he not ally himself with Mr. Mowat and secure the reference to the Privy Council on the only terms which a real friend of the Province could assent, instead of washing hand in hand with, and at the dictation of Sir John, the most virulent enemy of this Province? A man is known by the company he keeps, and Mr. Meredith gave little colour to his claim of being the friend of Ontario, by becoming, where her immense rights were concerned, the pliant tool of her most inveterate enemy.

Peterborough's Prosperity.

That Peterborough is destined to be a city of considerable importance in the near future, few who really knew the place as it appears now, can possibly doubt; nothing indeed but a lack of public spirit and enterprise, and of wisdom and energy on the part of our citizens, can retard the growth and advancement of our thriving and prosperous town. Situated in the midst of an excellent agricultural country, possessing almost unlimited water power, having within easy reach vast forests of timber and deposits of various minerals; commanding at present as outlets, lines of railroads promenting the province in all directions, and situated on the great trunk road from Toronto to Ottawa and the seaboard. Nothing but apathy, indifference and utter neglect to make use of our numerous advantages, can prevent Peterborough becoming one of the most important, if not the chief inland city in the Dominion.

As public journalists we desire to help on her progress, to point out some things which it is desirable her citizens should endeavour to secure, and to give some brief hints which may assist our public men to take the tide at the flood, which may lead us on to fortune.

We are now enjoying a certain measure of prosperity. A beautiful harvest will shortly be gathered in; work has been fairly plentiful, and trade tolerably brisk. Building operations go on briskly; the period of depression, which usually comes in unvarying cycles, seems to have passed. The next wave may soon come, it is true; in the meantime, we should use every effort to advance the interests of the place commercially, and do our utmost to keep pace with that enterprising spirit which appears to be abroad among us.

It should be our unflinching determination to work with a will as citizens, in order to perfect that which is lacking. Every individual can to some extent help Peterborough in her onward march, and in doing so, men will not fail to help themselves.

Among the present felt wants of Peterborough is an increase in her factories and industries. To fulfil what we believe is her high destiny, these must be multiplied. We have frequently in the columns of the Examiner alluded to this subject, and we consider it our duty to reiterate our views upon the matter again and again, until even the indifferent and lethargic are stirred to action. It is a matter of the utmost importance to our well being as a future city, that the vast water power now passing by our doors unused should be utilised. Hitherto we have made some strides in this direction, but there is plenty of room for improvement yet; no men with small capital, if they have sufficient shrewdness and energy, should be debarred from making ventures by keeping up our water privileges and sites at enormously high prices; this is penny-wise, pound-foolish policy. Let efforts be put forth to induce some enterprising capitalists to come here and establish their business. We are in principle opposed to bonuses, but all the lawful steps to build up industries in our noble town, will receive our hearty and determined support. "Railway privileges have been so greatly increased here of late, that this should prove an additional incentive to manufacturers to settle among us. If we have faith in the future we ought to be willing to make some slight sacrifices now; property holders, the town council, individual citizens, should all strive in whatever ways may seem to them best to accomplish this desirable end.

The new country opened up east and west of us by the Canada Pacific Railway, will prove a boon to our merchants, if our business advantages are properly put before its inhabitants; efforts should be made to bring the farmers along this line of railway, to see that it is in their interests to trade here. We would suggest that on the formal opening of the Canada Pacific Railway, invitations should be issued to the municipal councils of all the townships contigious to the line of railway, to visit Peterborough. A small sum to entertain them on their arrival, would be money well spent by our council; the railway authorities would no doubt grant free passes, and every individual thus invited would bring with him some friends. That such a course would result in increase of our trade and commerce in these new districts, we are thoroughly convinced.

DR. BARNARDO IN TOWN.

The arrival in town of Dr. Barnardo, of London, England, the originator and moving spirit of the noble chain of charitable institutions bearing his name, is an era in the history of philanthropy here. He is not content with six days work in the good cause. Last Sunday he gave three religious addresses. On Sunday morning he preached in the Opera House, given up to him by the Presbyterians, who worship there pending the restoration of their church. The house was filled to overflowing by an audience who listened attentively to his practical address, founded on Rev., xix., v. 9. In the afternoon Dr. Barnardo gave an address at the Y. M.C.A. rooms, from the words, "I am the door." In the evening a very large congregation filled the capacious George street Methodist Church, to listen to his discourse from the subject, "Pilate said unto them, what shall I then do with Jesus, which is called the Christ?" Dr. Barnardo's addresses on all these occasions were full of interest and marked by that earnest zeal that has borne such remarkable fruit in the noble work to which he has devoted his life.

Obituary.

Died at New Westminster, B. C., on 15th July ult. Wm. Armstrong Esq., aged 85 years.

Wm. Armstrong's family were formerly residents of this district, having settled in the township of Cavan about 1818 to 1820, but Mr. Armstrong did not settle there till about 1830. He was in business in this town, in connection with his brother-in-law Mr. John Brown, some time previous to 1830. His wife dying in that year, he removed to his farm where he resided up to 1851 when he removed, with several members of his family, to California. After a few years his attachment to British institutions and government and news of new discoveries led him to settle in British California where he and his sons were the first, or almost the first permanent settlers on the Mainland, on the site of the city of New Westminster. One of his sons has since represented that district several times in The Provincial Parliament. Mr. Armstrong was a man of more than ordinary intelligence and hence was early selected by his fellow citizens to represent them, first in the old district council, and afterwards in the township and county council, until his removed to Chilliwack. He was a colonel in the old Canadian Militia and raised a company during the troubles of 1837-8, but the whole affair came to a sudden termination while he and his men were on their way to Toronto. He was also the first or one of the first Magistrates appointed for the counties of Northumberland and Durham. He leaves three sons in British Columbia, one of whom is sheriff of the district, and two are engaged in business.

Editorial Notes.

A correspondent of the Globe gives a very favourable report of the condition of the crops on the Pacific Railway's Experimental Farms, between Moose Jaw and Calgary.

Manager Van Horne, of the C.P.R., is on the Pacific coast selecting a terminus for the railway. The choice it is understood, lies between Coal Harbor and English Bay, both of which are on the Burrard Inlet.

The Government having accepted the anti-Scott Act petition for Halton, a vote for the repeal of the act will likely be taken in that county in September. The contest wil be a keen one, as the anti-Scott Act men will employ every possible means to defeat it.

The sittings of the Chinese Commission to investigate the Celestial emigration question, and its bearing on British Columbia will begin at once. Hon. J. A. Chapleau (Chairman) and Nicholas Flood Davin (Secretary) arrived at Victoria Wednesday.

Presidental candidates are very plentiful amongst our Yankee friends—Cleveland, the Democratic, Blaine, the Republican, St. John, the Prohibition, and Ben. Butler, Ben. Butler's candidate—under Tammany auspices. What an amount of talk, slander and intrigue will convulse the Yankees with presidential colic for three months to come!

The Ontario Car Works, of London, established in 1871, have gone into insolvency. With Government importing its vessels from the States, and the Syndicate privileged to bring in their railway supplies free of duty, whilst our manufacturers are forced to pay heavy duties on their coal and raw material generally, such deplorable occurrences, says the Welland Tribune, are, of course, inevitable.

The Conservatives propose, it is said to shelve Mr. Meredith, the present leader (under Sir John) of the Ontario Opposition. He will, it is understood, receive a judgeship, and Mr. Senator Plumb will take his place as leader of the forlorn hope. The change will be a most appropriate one; as far as incompetency and entire unfitness for the position are concerned, no man is better qualified than the prose-poetic Plumb to fill Mr. Meredith's shoes.

Mr. Mowat is different in all respects from Conservative politicians. He is especially so, in that he decidedly refused a money present as a part of the demonstration in his honor to be held next September. Thorough-paced Tory politicians will pronounce him green for refusing money in any shape. You wouldn't catch them refusing, especially Sir Hector and Sir John, even if civil service employees and railway companies had to be called on to make up the dole.

The Mowat Reception Committee, at its meeting on Wednesday, appointed Mr. W. T. R. Preston general secretary, and arranged that Mr. Blake should be chairman at the banquet, and Mr. Mackenzie preside at the demonstration in the Park. His constituents in North Oxford have also arranged that in addition to their own reception in the Riding, one person from each polling subdivision in it be a special delegate to attend the Toronto reception.

The Stratford Beacon pays the following well-deserved tribute to Hon. Mr. Ross' administration as Minister of Education:—"Hon. G. W. Ross' management of our educational affairs is winning golden opinions in every quarter. He has already successfully grappled with some grave difficulties and is devoting himself to his work with such ability and enthusiasm that we may look for entire satisfaction. What was some time ago the weakest Department in the Government is now one of the strongest."

"It is quite clear," says the Bobcaygeon Independent, "that a steady change of opinion is going on in Ontario, and that such a change is not favorable to Sir John. The people are beginning to feel that they are overtaxed, and with that feeling comes, at the same moment, the knowledge that the taxation is for interests of the most sinister character. The whole result of the N. P. has been to impose a high taxation on those articles which are consumed by the people, and to give the proceeds of that taxation to capitalists, manufacturers, and political favorites. In this Province there is likewise an increasing knowledge of the fact that Ontario has to bear the bulk of the burden of Dominion taxation, and that of the millions upon millions of dollars which are being lavished by the Dominion Government on Manitoba and the North-West, Ontario has to furnish the largest share. Ontario is regarded by Sir John as a milch cow, to be milked whenever his following are hungry, and the Quebec Tories view Ontario's prosperity, wealth and credit with a grasping greediness exhibited in several forms."

The editor of the Belleville Intelligencer must be off for his holidays or off fishing. Some locum tenens of the editorial chair, all unschooled in the characteristic amenities, has blossomed out in the following defence of Mr. Mowat, as against the Mail's vicious vituperation. Our contemporary, in its, it is to be feared, temporary spasm of honesty, says:—"But why belittle a Canadian barrister of eminence? Mr. Mowat is as competent as any living man to argue the Boundary case on behalf of Ontario. He (with assistance, no doubt,) prepared and delivered one of the arguments before the arbitrators as well as before the Privy Council, and he has been familiar with the matter for 12 years. He had earned a reputation as a counsel before Sir John appointed him to the Bench in 1864; as a Judge for 8 years he added to his fame, and since he resigned the bench for the Legislative Assembly he has increased his reputation as a lawyer.

Now, can we afford it? Does it pay for the party press to abuse, to falsify, and minimize our public men in this way?"

NORWOOD.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

OBITUARY.

We regret to announce the death of an old and highly esteemed resident of the township of Asphodel, Mr. T. Murphy, which sad event took place on Thursday night last, at his family residence, in that township. Although the deceased gentleman had not been in his usual state of health for a couple of months back, yet he was able to attend to usual duties upon his farm, as well as drive or walk into Norwood up to a few days before his unlooked for demise occurred. About a week before his death he suffered from a severe stroke of paralysis, but recovering from this stroke the physicians were quite hopeful of, and that he would ultimately regain his usual health and strength. On Thursday last he was seized with a fit of apoplexy, and shortly after expired. It might be said he spent his whole life in Asphodel, as he came here in 1825 with his father and mother, being then only one year of age. All his life he had been industrious, and had acquired much valuable real estate in Asphodel, Norwood and Hastings, and leaves his family in affluent circumstances. The funeral of deceased took place on Saturday last, appropriate services being conducted in the Roman Catholic church here by the resident parish priest. The funeral cortege was a very large one, numbers from all the religious denominations of the community attending to pay the last rites to one who was held in high esteem in life.

QUARTERLY SERVICES.

The quarterly services of the Methodist church of the Norwood circuit were held on Sunday and Monday last. On Sunday morning the church was filled to overflowing, the services being conducted by the Rev. Mr. Johnston, of Lakefield, who preached an eloquent and instructive sermon, and afterwards assisted the Rev. Mr. Gee in the sacramental services. In the evening Mr. Johnston again occupied the pulpit and delivered another highly instructive and eloquent sermon to a large and attentive congregation. On Monday afternoon the usual quarterly official meeting was held, when the temporal affairs of the church were duly considered, and the financial reports from the various portions of the circuit were handed in. These, it will hardly be necessary to say, were found to be in a most satisfactory condition, and no section was found lacking in its monetary returns—a state of affairs attributable to the zeal and popularity of the pastor, Rev. Mr. Gee, as well as to the wealth of the members of his Norwood and Dummer congregations.

GARDEN PARTY.

A highly successful garden party was held on Mr. P. M. Grover's beautiful grounds, near his residence, on Friday evening last, under the management of the English Church of this village. The attendance was large, and the amusements provided were entered into with much zest by all; while the viands were of the best description, bountifully supplied and heartily enjoyed by all. The grounds were beautifully and tastefully lighted up, while the presence of the Norwood brass band enlivened the proceedings with a choice selection of music, well played under the direction of the painstaking bandmaster, Mr. Stickles. The receipts netted the handsome sum of $38.

OUR TRAIN SUPPLY

on the Canadian Pacific Railway is now complete and ample for all our increased wants. Commencing on Monday last we have six express trains a day—three going east at 12:12 noon, 8:07 p.m., and at 11:22 p.m.; and three going west, at 5:24 a.m., 6:59 a.m., and at 6:50 p.m., besides an innumerable number of freight trains going east and west, indicating the terrible amount of traffic which daily passes over this great through line. Norwood has at last realized its railway wish, and so far is well pleased with the great blessings this gigantic railway enterprise has conferred upon it in a commercial point of view.

EXCURSION.

An excursion, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Co-operative Society of the Methodist Church here, will be made over the Canada Pacific Railway to Ottawa on Wednesday next, leaving Norwood at o'clock a.m., and good to return on any regular train for three days. The fare for the round trip is only $2.50. As Ottawa is now an attractive city, there is no doubt a very large number will avail themselves of this chap chance to visit the capital of the Dominion.

GOOD FOR NORWOOD.

It is exceedingly gratifying to notice that a number of Norwoodites have been very successful at the recent examinations for school certificates. T. B. Scott, A. S. Scott and H. Anderson have been awarded grade A honors, while those of grade B are S. McLaughlan, M. Elliott, M. McNulty and K. Servis, quite as large a number of candidates as is reported as having been successful from places having more pretentious educational institutions.

PERSONAL.

On Tuesday morning Mr. and Mrs. Melville Millar and Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Walsh left by train for the sea shore, Old Orchard Beach, Maine, where they will pass a fortnight.

Mr. H. A. Rabidge, Auditor of the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railway, Chicago, a former Peterborough boy, is in town visiting friends. Chicago air seems to agree with him as well as the Yankees appreciate Canuck capability and trustworthiness.

Messrs. W. H. Doel and W. S. Lea, of Toronto, were in town on Tuesday making arrangements for the annual excursion of the York Pioneers, which takes place to Peterborough Aug. 26th. It is customary for the Mayor and corporation of the places visited to give them an official reception.

The Banner Week

FOR

SILKS

Giroux & Sullivan sold during last week, more silks than all the other houses combined. Since they placed on sale the 22 inch Black Silk at 75 cents per yard, which is equal to any offered elsewhere at $1.00, the sales have been immense. Their large and well lighted Silk Department has been thronged with eager buyers, all declaring their goods to be the best value ever offered in Peterborough, notwithstanding the exaggerated advertisements of other houses, who cannot buy them as low as the retail price here.

Where these Silks are procured, or why they are sold so cheap is no affair of the customers. It is enough for them to know that they can buy here about 25 per cent less than the pervading prices throughout the town. Do not fail to ask for our Summer Silks at 42½c., 45c., 50c., 60c., and 75c. See our Black Dress Silks at $1.00, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75 $2.00, $2.25, $2.50, warranteed pure silk both filling and warp. They are heavy in texture beautiful in finish and quality, surpassing anything in the town at 25 per cent. higher in price. Don't fail to see them at

Patrons will please call early in the day, as there is sure to be a rush in the afternoons and evenings, which will not make it so convenient for purchasing.

I would respectfully state that the prices I have decided to sell at are for the SPECIAL BENEFIT OF THE PUBLIC, rather than for my neighbouring competitors, who will, no doubt, commence ticketing their goods for the purpose of selling at prices largely in advance of mine.

Crescent Camping Party.

Racy Notes of a Lakeside Outing.

To the Editor of the EXAMINER:

The members of the above camping party repaired to the station on Monday morning, July the twenty-first, and their met some jovial friends from Port Hope. While waiting at the station, each one was weighed and then all started for Stony Lake. At Lakefield some delay was caused by the tardiness of the engineer, in sending the car with our luggage, where we might unload. At last we embarked and had a very pleasant trip to Gin Island. Here we found every thing in readiness for us, two of the party, which now numbered twenty-five, consisting nine gentlemen and sixteen ladies having gone up a few days previously. The "Sergeant" soon had supper ready for us, which we partook of in princely style, on board a lumberman's cookery which has been left near the island, and which we towed to our landing place and used for a dining-room.

The first night was rather sleepless, Nos. 1 and 3 making the welkin ring with song and laughter, the old Scotch song, "Up in the morain's no for me," bring the favorite; Nos. 2 and 6 were the abodes of a few somnambulists, who serenaded us about "the keystane hour o'night's black arch."

On Tuesday afternoon we were visited by Mr. Brownscombe and party, which visit we returned in the evening, having our canoes adorned with chinese lanterns. After a pleasant evening with lots of singing, we returned to our camp and retired for the night.

On Wednesday Harry was "dumped" into the lake, but was soon rescued. The same evening another canoe in which were two persons was upset, but the "boys" brought them to shore safely. The following few days were spent in visiting the principal points of interest such as, Fairy lake which is beautifully situated a little way from the southern shore of Stony lake; Lovesick lake, the boys coming back awfully "lovesick." Fort Royal, whose owner, Mr. Clague has quite a collection of paintings. Mount Julian and Eagle Mount were also visited. Jim and George had an upset but succeeded in getting to shore safely.

Some of the evenings were spent in dancing, our "dining-room" serving the purpose of a "ball-room," and Jim (Port Hope Jim) giving us lots of music. The other Jim and one of the ladies were nearly lost one night, being overtaken by darkness while out on the lake; some of us went out with a lantern, and found the "lost" who were once in camp again. As most of the party had taken bathing suits, the healthful exercise was indulged in a number of times. Two of the ladies being rather venturesome, went beyond their depth once, and made a lot of "spluttering" while being brought to shore by a couple of the boys. Two ladies from Peterboro visited us over Sunday, arriving Saturday night and leaving on Monday.

Our camp presented a fine appearance, the tents being placed so as to form a crescent, in front of which we had a large Union Jack with three streamers of small flags reaching to the ground, and numbered about one hundred and twenty.

Wednesday, the thirtieth, our last day, having arrived, we proceeded, immediately after breakfast, to pack up, having made arrangements with the captain of the Fairy to call for us at 10 o'clock. He arrived in good time, and we were soon steaming towards Young's Point. The captain was very obliging, and made our passage as pleasant as possible. On arriving at Young's Point we were not a little annoyed to find that we had to paddle to Lakefield, the water being too low to allow the steamer to proceed. This difficulty being overcome we were soon brought to Peterboro by the G. T. R'y. We were all weighed again at the station. One of the ladies had gained five pounds during the trip, so it was concluded that she was the "man" that "stole the pie."

The Port Hopers remained here until 8.35, when they again took train for home, some of them being almost too late. As the train moved out we gave them three rousing cheers. We hope to meet them all again at Stony lake, should we ever have an opportunity of so doing. Yours &c.

THE BOUNDARY AND OTHER MATTERS.

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

Not long since the Review made the very unnecessary assertion of its political independence. Of course, it is superlatively so! Always, in the beginning, now, and future, just as free as a mounted slave. Why, then, should it so test the faith of its votaries by making such a declaration, as incredible as the solemn affirmation of its great Juggernaut, about the impossible cleanness of his hands. The honesty and capacity of its party leaders are the only bonds that bind that faithful journal to support them. These two qualities belong supereminently to the Grand Old Man(ager) and whomsoever he may call to assist him in honestly and ably (regardless of expense) governing this perennially prosperous Dominion, which has had an uninterrupted season of good times since the g. o. m. was fired across the continent by a Gean. Next morning, after the election began the reign of a golden-promised era, which has been duly fulfilled till tall chimneys are nearly as common as trees, and idle men as scarce as January strawberries? We are now informed by that loquacious journal that the best friend of Ontario has not been such insignificant pottiegoers as Oliver Mowat (the geer), whose miserable machinations against the verdant Big Push Wilkie & Co. must soon be proclaimed from every house top, but the clean-digited, high-minded immaculate Premier of Canada. He, we should believe, has been the wise and good father of his people. He proposed a reference to the Privy Council years before it was referred to such "persons" as Thornton, Hincks and Harrison. How could these incompetents on this side of the Atlantic have the means of arriving at so just a conclusion as a Privy Council, incompetents, too, on the other side. Then, in the matter of expense, how much more economical to have the boundaries of the Provinces settled at the foot of the throne, that place so dear to the heart of the great constitutional lawyer? Well, the boundary business is likely to be settled little to the satisfaction of either the g. c. l. or those who forced him to oppose the ratification of the award, and the said foot will give his pretensions, as it has already done, another rude shock, so as to shake his votaries' confidence in his infallibility on constitutional questions, and his ardent desire to have Boundary Awards, Streams' Bills, or any other bills, appealed to the foot which has so cruelly kicked out so many of the pretensions of the g. c. l. to the possession of the legal lore necessary to occupy the highest niche in that portion of the temple of fame dedicated to the profession of the law. We have an industrious, well paid, and little used Senate of honorable, grave, and learned seigniors, who may well be credited with knowing more of our affairs than any Privy Council in Europe, and who would be sure to give a more intelligent and just as independent decisions if they were ordered to do so by the grand old man(ager). Let it be constituted a court to try all great constitutional questions, and we are sure that the great constitutional lawyer will soon recover his lost fame and keep Canada for the Canadians (Lower), and the money spent in trying such cases before an antiquated tribune could be much better spent in subsidies to bribery brigades and other patriotic institutions designed to free this Province from the grasp of the despotic, tyrannical, incompetent, plotting and bound-not-to-go Mowat, the arch enemy of Ontario.

Yours truly,

C. L. S.

P. S.—Suppose the decision the other way, how trumpantly John A. and his satellites, of all degrees would have quoted the celebrated "not a single stick" speech, as an undeniable proof of the continued astuteness of the infallible. What glorifications would have been indulged in at the expense of Mowat & Co., and what an argument for his going and making room for those true patriotic men who, failing to purchase the constituencies by bribery, proceed to corrupt members of Parliament, and who have no names in their vocabulry sufficiently expressive to show their detestation of those who met bribery with cunning, and knavery with sagacity. To whomsoever concocted the conspiracy to form that coalition so much desired by the employers of Meek, Big Push, etc., it might be said it was worse than a crime, it was a blunder, and worse than a blunder, a failure, and the worst kind of a failure, one thoroughly exposed.

Agricultural Grounds Again.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

I am glad you are waking up to see the necessity of having agricultural grounds for town and county. When you say there is lack of go, I would like you would go a little further and say where the lack is; whether in the president, the directors, or the public at large. At our annual meeting last January, was the time for members to put in a president and directors that would attend to the business as far as lay in their power. The directors elected, appointed a committee of four, the president, secretary, Mr. Garbutt, and Mr. Rutherford, to see if there could be a sale made to the town, of the portion of the old burying ground belonging to the county, or to sell the whole to some private individual; but they could not arrive at any conclusion, so on June 21st, the secretary called a meeting of the directors to lay another scheme before them. It was to unite with the sporting part of the community in a lease from Mr. Morrow, of a lot of thirty acres, Mr. Morrow having the privilege of selling at any time by paying for the improvements. Your directors found that Mr. Morrow would not sell any less quantity than thirty acres, nor take any less than $12,000 for it; this the directors would not agree to, so the meeting adjourned to the 5th of July, and asked a committee of the projectors of of race course to meet them. At that meeting they informed us that they had leased the grounds for ten years, five years at $125 a year, and five years at $200 or $250 a year, and that Mr. Morrow could break the lease at any time by paying them for their improvements. The committee wanted the society to help to fence it, put up the stand and horse sheds, and put up our own agricultural hall. The majority of the directors being farmers, could not see a speculation in it, and the meeting again broke up. Immediately after this meeting a gentleman in the township of Smith offered to buy a lot the same distance from the present market at the North end of the town, belonging to J. B. Nicholls. Again the secretary in the absence of of the president called a meeting of the directors for the 2nd of August; to this call only some of the directors responded, and there were not enough to form a quorum and could do no business, those who were there drove to see the grounds at the north end of the town.

On their way there they had an interview with Mr. George A. Cox, who offered them a lot of thirty acres running from communication road east to Hazel Brae. This property belongs to Messrs. Cox, Hazlett, and Walsh. This is the nearest to the town by far, and the best we have seen yet. These gentleman offered to give us a road in at both ends, the one at the south-west corner, beautiful and level, the other from George st., only eight or ten chains by Hazel Brae. Mr. Cox assures us the price will be only nominal compared to the other, and they will sell any part or quantity to suit the society. I think we had far better deal with these parties than the others who have only a lease, and that not for any stated time, and not for very laudable purposes. I think if you and your contemporaries would let your politics alone and advocate this scheme, at least a while, you would confer a great blessing on town and county. If the town and county would unite and sell the old burying grounds, the county council promised their share to the society two years ago, and at our last central the business men interested guaranteed north of the market square, nearly $600 if needed, Mr. Cox himself subscribing $50 if we would come to terms. We would not object to his giving it then; and I understand there is every prospect of the old Cobourg Railroad being opened up pretty soon, if not it could be used as a road to travel on, and I have no doubt but there would be a switch laid up to the ground. Then we would have one of the best grounds in Ontario, a beautiful rising ground just north of Mr. Dickson's picnic grounds, and west of the girls home, beside George st., no need inviting the public to drive on it to make it solid. One gentleman offers to clear enough to hold the fall show on. Now Mr. Editor I have given a plain statement, and true as far as I know. I hope you will go ahead and quit finding fault with other people; hoping you will long enjoy the fruit of your labor.

I remain yours truly,

Smith, Aug. 11th, 1884. T. E. Bell.

P. S. Since writing the above, I find the fences of the old show ground burned down, so the prospects for a show this fall are rather slim, however there will be a meeting of the directors on Saturday, the 23rd, at two o'clock p. m., to consider the matter. Would it not be well for parties from the town to meet the directors. Daily Evening Review and Times papers please copy.

THE EARTH TREMBLES.

A Shock of Earthquake From Maine to Mexico.

New York Panic-Stricken—The Duration of The Shock Said to be Ten Seconds—The Gothamites Thoroughly Scared.

A few minutes after two o'clock Saturday afternoon, New York city and vicinity was startled by an earthquake lasting ten seconds. The sensation caused by it was so unusual and the shock so all-prevading that a universal panic seized the population. The first impression which took possession of the people was that their houses were about to fall. They ran into the streets terror-stricken and with blanched faces, only to discover that all their neighbours were rushing out amazed and panic-stricken like themselves. As there was no evidences of catastrophe confidence returned, but many people remained in front of their houses for some time, dreading a second shock. None, however, came. The first intimation of the earthquake was a low rumbling sound, followed by a shock like that of a violent explosion, which caused the buildings to quiver. The rattling continued about eight seconds. The effect of the jar was much more perceptible in houses of light structure. In many instances a clearly defined rocking movement was felt, and dishes were shaken from the shelves. No damage of any kind has been reported. As far as ascertained the shock was entirely imperceptible on the water, and no tidal wave was observed.

A SECOND SHOCK.

At 2:15 o'clock a second shock was felt at Atlantic Highlands, N. J., but was less violent than the first. The severest shock was reported from Seabright, N. J., where the depot was shifted to one side, shaking up the contents and alarming the inmate. At Long Branch the jars of the batteries in the Telegraph office were overturned and communication interrupted. In Brooklyn the streets were alive with people who had come out to ascertain the cause of the rocking.

DURATION OF THE SHOCK.

A scientist upon the first perceptible motion took out a stop watch, and timed the vibrations. He reported that the shock began as nearly as could be determined at six and one half minutes past two; that the first shock lasted ten seconds, and "quieting down" took nearly fifty seconds more. At Trenton the shock was timed at 2:03 p.m., while at more southerly points it was felt at 2:10. Reports from various points indicate that the shock was felt from Portland, Maine, to the City of Mexico. The Brooklyn bridge ocillated visibly, while the bridge rocked as if struck by a hurricane or an iron steamboat.

SAD DROWNING CASE.

On Monday evening last, a sad drowning accident took place here. On that evening, James Wright, an old resident of this township, and a companion named Foley, who were working on Long Island for Mr. John William Hall, left the island in a canoe to go to Gore's Landing, where they indulged in a jollification, the principal ingredient of which was wiskey. They left the landing some time in the night, for the island which, they did not reach. Foley was found next day asleep on an adjacent island, where he was sleeping off the effects of his carouse, but he could tell nothing concerning his companion, Wright; or how he himself came to be on the island where he was found. The supposition was, that the two men in crossing, in some way capsized the canoe, that Wright was drowned; and that Foley, with the marvellous luck that seems sometimes to give a charmed life to a tipsy man, managed to get ashore. On Friday, some of the neighbors of Wright, secured a steamer, and while crossing the lake, in the track it was supposed the canoe had taken, poor Wright's body was discovered, and buried on Saturday, no inquest having been held. When found, the body of the unfortunate man had the hat on the head, and a pipe in one hand. Deceased was about forty-five years of age, and leaves one unmarried sister and an aged and bed-ridden mother, who was dependent chiefly on her son for her support.

WIT AND HUMOR.

Said the robber, "Be family jewels—assof" "Mum," said the fourteen lady, "but one—A gentleman—the smiling a fortune cent; But 'tis well secured and cannot be lost." "Quick! hand me the jewel, or else you shall die!" Said the robber, with fiercely flashing eye. "I can't," said the lady, with smiling repose, "The corkscrew's fast—on my husband's nose."

Sweet are the uses of adversity, but most people prefer sugar.

The new society wrinkle that is pronounced success: Pronunciation matches.

Culture: Parlor-maid (to Buttons)—"You vulgar boy! You should never say 'ax.' You should say 'hask!'"—London Punch.

A western journal says it is not able to see why a saloon should have more influence than a shoemaker's shop. Why don't you take to leading ground in the other cobbler's shop and find out?

In portions of Mexico men, women and children smoke cigarettes. That is one of the few countries where a man can enjoy a smoke without having his wife lecture him for spending so much for tobacco.

George W. Cable, the novelist, is called a Metaconjer of words by a Chicago paper. The Chicago paper doesn't know what that means, but is confident that it is a tone above any idea ever grasped by a St. Louis journalist.—New Orleans Picayune.

A widow committed suicide in Boston the other day, and the last simple and touching words which she penned were, "I have taken P. G." "Poor Jane!" remarked her sorrowing husband when he heard the sad news, "green always was her color, and she just doted on Paris."

It doesn't make any difference when a woman visiting a lady friend jumps up off her chair and says, "Oh, dear me, I must go; I left the children all alone," and throws on her bonnet and shawl; that doesn't prevent her from stopping out in the cold at the front door and talking half an hour with the lady of the house.

Eleven thousand dollars' worth of ink was used by the postoffice department last year in stamping and cancelling letters. An economically-disposed person thinks that if the government would permit cancelled stamps to be reused, much of this expense might be saved; but the government never did go very strong on economy.—Norristown Herald.

The pith of the Edmunds Mormon law is that, if a man has more than one wife he shall not be allowed to vote. It is doubtful if such disfranchisement can stand. Double marriage, by the way, carries its own punishment with it. A better way would be to let all the wives vote for handsome gentiles. That would soon knock the bottom out of Mormonism.

Irving, in his farewell address at the Star Theater, New York, said Ellen Terry "by her fireside will often tell of the kindness she received from the American people," whereupon the practical Springfield Republican is reminded of Macaulay's "Lay of Horatius," and fancies how oft

With weeping and laughter,
Still is the story told
How well Miss Terry stirred the Yanks
And got their gracious gold.

Several gentlemen from different states were discussing the merits of their particular homes. "Kansas is a great state. We raise sixty bushels of corn and two hundred bushels of potatoes to the acre" said a man from Kansas. "But have you Kansas people any market for your produce?" asked a man from Connecticut. "Certainly they have," responded an envious Texan. "They raise enough grasshoppers and potato-bugs to eat up ten times the corn and potatoes they can raise."

Fame is an uncertain possession. A gentleman well known in the literary world was presented to a lady the other evening at a fashionable gathering. "Your name seems very familiar," remarked the young lady. "Perhaps," intimated the friend who had made the presentation, "you have seen it in print." "Perhaps I have," replied the lady, plaintively, "but I thought I must have seen it on a sign; I am so forgetful." Tableau! during which the gentlemen exchanged explosive and reproachful glances, and the lady looked wanderingly at both.

The performances of the locomotive whistle we are told have been systematized on a western railroad. Seven whistles are to indicate "down brakes," thirty-two whistles, "up brakes;" forty whistles and two snorts, a "back-up." The instructions add: "In case of doubt, whistle like the d——l;" at the street crossings, "whistle considerably." Again. "Always whistle before dinner. Require the fireman to keep the whistle valve open during dinner. After dinner, whistle and squirt water, then back up. Then go ahead with a whistle, a squirt and a ring."

Some husbands are too solicitous about the health of their wives. While walking on Austin avenue Mrs. Duzenbury stopped in front of the show window of a millinery store and exclaimed: "What a beautiful assortment of hats!" "Come on, quick, Louisa. You will catch cold and die if you stand still on that grating after you have been walking fast. I can't let you take such risks," said the careful, affectionate husband; and before Mrs. Duzenbury could decide what kind of a bonnet to select she was hurried past the dangerous spot.

"Mugwump" is a new slang word in New York. The Sun says it is an ancient New England term, and smacks of the language of the red man. It is used to signify, when gravely spoken, a man of importance, but more commonly a man who thinks himself of importance. Governor Waller, of Connecticut, is responsible for the renewed and widened interest in the word, he having discovered it in some recently published letters of his. A leader such as Governor Waller is in Connecticut or an authority like Lindley Murray is a mugwump. A synonym for the word in its other sense is the New York term "Big Bug," or the Washington expression, "Swellhead."

"Will you act as witness to old Bolusi's signature?" inquired a lawyer of an itinerant apple vender who haunts the office. "Vell, I guess not," answered the vagrant. "I take no chances like that." "Chances, man," exclaimed the lawyer. "This is Mr. Bolusi and he wishes to sign his will. That is all. I merely wish you to witness his signature." "Oh, that may be all right," responded the apple merchant, "but I heard you say the other day that the general rule of law is that a person having a pecuniary interest in a will is disqualified from acting as a subscribing witness thereto. Perhaps Mr. Bolusi has remembered me. Good day, gentlemen." The fact was, the man could not write.

ERICA'S SACRIFICE!

A QUESTION OF

Forgiveness or Dishonor

So the girl mused sadly enough this chill September evening, dimly conscious of the monotonous mutter of the waves on the rocks, and the swift scratching of Phillip's pen as it flew over the paper. He sat writing at the table, but not so absorbed in his work that he did not observe her silence and abstraction. Perhaps, after all, it was a dull life he had bound her to, wedded to a man ten years older than herself, he thought—nay, scarcely thought, for the vague suggestion of which he was simply conscious never framed itself to anything so tangible even as thought.

He threw down the pen at last, and rose up, coming over to where she sat.

"It is too dark to see," he said, "and I am but a dull companion for you, Erica. You are very silent and triste to-night."

She started from her reverie, and coloring a little pushed her hands through the wavy hair that fell about her.

"I thought you were busy," she said, half apologetically. "Shall I ring for lights?"

"No, not just yet, unless you want them; it is pleasant resting thus," answered Phillip, leaning against the window-frame. "That manuscript can go out to-morrow morning; I can post it myself to-night. I am getting restless Erica, to go back to work and life."

"You are a true Londoner," said Erica, laughing; "you cannot be happy long parted from beloved pavements and delightful dissipations."

"In which, I apprehend, my wild seagull is longing to join," Phillip said with a smile.

"I shall be dreadfully unworldly, I am afraid, Phillip," said Erica, sighing.

"That is best. Our modern young ladies are so terribly wise and preternaturally wide-awake. There is the postman; he will give us something to do."

He stepped out of the window and took the letters from the man—two or three for himself, and two for Erica.

"Walter's writing, one of mine," he said, giving his wife's letters into her hand, and she bent over them to make out the hand-writing by the fading light, and suddenly drew in her breath with almost a gasp.

She was glad that the gloom hid her deathly pallor from Philip's eyes.

But he had noticed that she seemed moved by something, and bending down laid his hand on her shoulder with a touch that thrilled her through with self-reproach.

"What is it, my child—has anything startled you?" he said, gently, and she pressed her hand to her heart for a second before she answered him.

"Nothing—no, there is nothing.—Shall I ring for lights, Philip?" She rose up as she spoke, and laid her hand on the bell. "You cannot see to read your letters."

She turned then and went out of the room, and Philip half sighed as the door closed on her. He seemed, after all to have but half her confidence. Yet it was nothing—nothing. He could not expect to know, to share, all that troubled her.

Alone in her dressing-room, Erica St. John read the letter, the writing of which had been ever a harbinger of sorrow and anxiety. And her lips grew white and her eyes burned as she read.

"So you've got to Grayle House," Arnold Murray wrote. "My poor Erica! You will be awfully dull there with only your husband for a companion. It makes me mad to think of it, Erica. Ah, why could you not have chosen differently? But I'll say no more. You will only be angry. I am coming down —perdu, of course—and will hang about for a chance of seeing you to-morrow night."

"To-morrow! Oh, Heaven! To-night!"

The girl hardly breathed, and looked back in feverish haste to the date. Yes, there was no mistake.

"To-night. That would be—— Let me read on and see."

"I am in trouble, of course. I always am. And you will be an angel of goodness and help me, won't you, Erica? Try and come down to the south gate somehow. I don't know how I shall tide on if you can't help me."

She let the letter drop from her hands and stood for many moments motionless, her eyes gazing out straight before her, her lips set.

What miserable burden of sorrow had been cruelly laid on this young life! She had need, indeed, to remind herself of the sanctity of her oath, a sanctity she deemed inviolate—need, indeed, to look around this room and picture to herself again the form, the face of the dying woman who had left her this legacy of woe.

"Oh, Philip, Philip!" she murmured, pressing her hands to her forehead, "I am doing you bitter wrong. I dare not think of the end of all. Must it come some day?"

Erica took the letter again, and setting light to the paper, watched it consume away until but black ashes remained, and even of those she removed all trace. Then she went downstairs again, entering the library with a light, soft step.

"Well," she said, coming to Philip's side as he stood reading by the mantelpiece, "what does Walter say?"

Philip laughed; yet she fancied he looked a little troubled too.

"Poor lad," he said, "one of the burdens of his letter is 'money.' I am afraid I shall have to hint to him that there is a limit to my purse. He confesses, with a penitence which is amusing, that he has been 'doing the swell' a little too much with the fellows of his regiment. 'Champagne breakfasts and dinners at Richmond,' he says, naively, 'do walk into a lot of money, Philip, and you know all the fellows do it, and it looks so mean not to go in for the same style.'"

"Is that the height of his offences?" said Erica, with a smile that was full of pain. "You cannot refuse him, Philip; the lad has temptations, no doubt, and the Lancers are expensive."

"Too expensive," said St. John; "and I scarcely know how to refuse him. I suppose I shall have to run up to town and look into it. Perhaps he does not tell me all."

"Oh, Philip, you are so cynical."

"And you, my dear child," and St John smiled half sadly, "you are so innocent. Do you think younger brothers always make father confessors of their elders?"

"I trow not; they are young men still."

"But mere money spending or wasting," he added, after a pause, "does not trouble me. You can't make a grave man out of a lad of twenty. If Walter keeps clear of anything ungentlemanly I shall not look too closely into his accounts."

"And what is your estimate of 'ungentlemanly?'" Erica said, listening eagerly for the answer; she knew it could only crush her with pain.

"A difficult question to answer. Betting and gambling, though not generally counted as degrading for a gentleman, in my code of honor are wrong, and there are other ways of staining honor, to which I don't think Walter would be tempted, for, whatever his failings, he is a St. John. He speaks in his letter," Philip added, glancing at the letter, "of a young fellow he seems to be a good deal with. He says: 'I've lately cottoned with a fellow, who's really awfully nice, but awfully fast; not one of your sort, Philip—not that I accuse you of being anything so dreadful as straight-laced—but he bets and plays like "cats o'clock," and goes ahead generally. He's got some money, but not enough for all he does, and the devil knows how he lives. But I tell you he goes the pace, and I don't know how it is one gets drawn on with him. He's so confoundedly jolly and winning, you know.'"

"His name—he doesn't say his name," said Erica, and all her control could not prevent her voice from trembling a little, for her heart seemed to be crying out but one name—a name she dreaded to hear.

"No, he does not mention his name; he says he has come down to Rington, where there are races coming off.—Rington is not far from here, is it?"

"No, not far," the girl said, mechanically—"not far."

And then Philip turned again to his writing, glancing at her from under his long, dark eyelashes.

She puzzled him a little to-night; she was clearly not herself. Perhaps she was oppressed with the nervousness that must come about her these first days at the old house of her childhood, or she was not well, or maybap—that dark cloud of thought would sweep up—she was beginning to find her life with him dull and dreary.

The minutes slipped by fast to him; slowly, each one laden with anxious thought, to her; till at length he rose, having finished the work he had to do.

"Eleven o'clock," he said, looking at his watch. "I am going to take this up to the postoffice. You will not mind being alone for a little time, Erica, will you?"

He half smiled as he said it, for she had a fearless spirit and was used to being alone.

So he went out, and she heard his light step on the gravel-path, stood listening to the receding sound till it ceased altogether and she knew he had passed out into the road that led down the cliff-side into the High-street. The postoffice was quite at the other end of Grayle, and some twenty minutes must elapse before he could return.

Then Erica stood up, pale and anxious, yet resolute.

For a moment she paused, and a sigh of utter despair and anguish escaped her.

"Shall I go," she murmured.

Then as the remembrance of her oath, sworn by the bedside of her dying mother, recurred to her, she shuddered and clasped her hands together piteously.

"I must, I must," she whispered to herself with white lips, and pushing her hand through her hair, she threw a light shawl over her shoulders and stepped out of the window into the soft chill air.

She hurried on with every sense on the alert to catch the faintest sound.

She sped down the damp walks across the lawn, behind a belt of thick trees that shut out the view of the house, then stopped, her heart throbbing, wildly, heavily, at the little white gate that gave access to an unfrequented road winding drearily over the hills inland, paused as a man's figure came to the gate, and swinging it open, stood before her and clasped her hands in his.

She trembled as she felt the clasp that closed round her nerveless fingers —trembled with a vague sense of fear she could not control.

CHAPTER IV.

"FOR OUR MOTHER'S SAKE."

"You are come, then," he said, in a low voice. "How good you are, Erica. How did you manage?"

"It matters not for you to ask," the girl said, quickly, and with a flash of haughtiness in her tone. It chafed her, and was a bitter humiliation to her spirit, this enforced deception, this stolen interview. "You must tell me quickly what trouble you are in, and what you want now, for I have but little time."

"The old story, Erica," answered Arnold Murray, with a half laugh and a half sigh. "Money, always that confounded money. You wouldn't believe what a lot of money a fellow can run through in London."

"I can quite," she answered, briefly, "when I know how yours goes."

"Women don't know anything about how our money goes," said the young man, good-humoredly. "I've got rid of a heap, I know, and I'm awfully in debt. I've sold one of my horses, but that won't do quite."

"I don't know what you have to do with horses at all with your income," said Erica. "It is a needless extravagance."

"It's a good stock in trade, dear coz," replied Arnold, laughing. "Why, Belle won me enough money at the Aylesbury Steeplechase last June to keep me going for a month. I haven't sold her—it's the park hack that went to Tattersall's."

"And how long, Arnold," said the girl, leaning her hands heavily on the gate, "is this to go on? There must come an end some time. Do you ever think of it?"

"Ah, now don't preach, sweet cousin," said Arnold, entreatingly, and still jestingly, though he bit his lip, and in the darkness she did not see the flash in his eyes. "I really mean to do better, and turn over a new leaf."

"You always mean to do so much, Arnold," Erica said, sadly; "is that why you accomplish so little?"

"'Pon my word, Erica, I half think you are getting spoilt by Philip St. John's notions," said Arnold, a little impatiently.

"What do you know of my husband?" she said. "You cannot even comprehend his code of honor—you cannot understand him."

"I don't pretend to," said her cousin, dryly. "I wouldn't be cramped up to his notions for something. What the deuce does he mean by banning your friends and being too haughty to look at a fellow. A Murray's as good as a St. John!"

"Hush! Oh, Arnold, for pity's sake, hush!" The girl laid her hand on his in an agony of fear, for he had raised his voice in his anger, and what if he should be heard? "I have not told him even of your existence; he does not know your name; he has not harmed you. But tell me," she whispered, looking round, "is it you who have been one of Walter's companions? Tell me the truth, Arnold."

He paused before he replied. He had not meant her to know that he was acquainted with Philip's brother, and had even asked Walter to say nothing of him in his letter. But he saw it was useless to deny it.

"I know him; yes, a young fool," he said, contemptuously. "He's not a bad fellow, but a perfect apron-string.—'Philip' here and 'Philip' there."

"Arnold," she said, eagerly, "don't tempt him to do wrong, to do—as you do. Oh, for my sake, Arnold. I bear so much, you can never know how much, for you." Her voice faltered, and for a moment she bowed her head on his arm, but almost instantly recovering herself she went on hurriedly: "And, Arnold, he will tell Philip about you, and he might find out that you are my cousin, and Philip would forbid me to see or help you again. For our mother's sake, Arnold, for she was your mother in all but blood, drop this friendship; it will work dire woe."

Looking back afterwards both remembered those words, which neither knew then as a prophecy.

Arnold, whose impressionable nature was easily touched, was moved and greatly troubled by the girl's sorrowful appeal; he loved his cousin, and depended upon her in a certain fashion, though he never by any chance deferred to her wishes or attended to her advice. He knew quite well that she spoke no less than truth, and it was a fresh count against Philip St. John. Yet he had no intention of giving up the acquaintance of the young fellow who seemed to have plenty of money at his command, and through whom he could wound Philip St. John.

"Arnold," the girl said slowly, and when she spoke at last knew that he could not openly resist her will, "do you hesitate? Remember that I have power in my hands, and I will do no more for you if you refuse to attend to the one request I have made of you for years."

"Don't get angry, dear coz," he said, lightly, seeing he must yield, outwardly, at least. "I won't drag him down to destruction; it's a wonder, in fact, you accuse me of evil enough to lead anyone. But now, Erica," he added, "you will help me this once more; 'pon my word I don't know where to turn for a hundred pounds, and I'll sleep in prison next week if you're hard-hearted!"

"A hundred pounds, Arnold!" The girl paused, listening, the color coming and going on her cheek; then she said, hurriedly, "You shall have it. I will send a cheque to you. But you must go up to London and get the money from the bank, not from anyone in Rington. But, remember, Arnold," she said, and again laid her hand on his arm, "this cannot, must not, go on. I have paid your debts over and over again, and the fund that I have drawn on for that—by the power left me in my mother's will—cannot last for ever, though you seem to think it can."

"And when that fails, I'll emigrate," said Arnold, lightly. "I should do capitally as a sheep-farmer, or something. It's a good thing your husband has no control over that cash, Erica, and never asks what you do with it, else poor Arnold Murray would have gone to the dogs long since."

"Where shall I send?" said the girl, briefly, without answering his last words.

"I'm at the Crown Hotel; send up Poynter, he won't split to a soul. You are going? Thanks, dear Erica, you are my tower of strength," he said, with a softened tenderness in his voice that moved her to a strange emotion.

She did not trust herself to answer, but only gave him her hand with a quiet "Good-night," and then, after watching his form fill it disappeared over the hill-path, turned back to the house, scarce seeing her way for the blinding tears that rose to her eyes, and that she strove in vain for a moment to check.

She must be calm, at least outwardly, whatever misery she endured, for Philip must not see a trace of emotion; and he was so quick and firm, she feared to meet his eyes until she had mastered herself.

Almost as she stepped once more through the window of the library, Philip came up the pathway, and the girl paused.

"You should not have gone out in this chill night air, child," he said, putting his hand on her shoulder, and drawing her into the room; "and you are trembling and white, Erica. You foolish child, you must not play with yourself so; I could not spare you now, dear one."

The soft tone, the tender caress, so rare from him, were too much for nerves already over-strained and excited by all that had happened that evening, and she suddenly threw herself on his breast and burst into such bitter weeping as startled him, and struck a shock of pain to his very heart.

Was this Erica, so brave-spirited, so firm, so little given to tears, so utterly free from even those weaknesses that endear women to most men, weeping so, and apparently without cause?

Was it his fault? And even while he held her to him, and strove to soothe her, he felt—ah, with that sure keenness that was anguish, that she shrank from him, while even she sought this shelter. And he remembered these things afterwards.

She grew quiet after a little while, making a terrible effort, and so gaining back her self-control, and, lifting her head, tried to draw herself away, but this he did not suffer.

"You are unstrung to-night, Erica," he said, with grave, half-sorrowful tenderness; "is it my fault? You have forgiven me my stern, cold words to-day, my poor child; but they still wound your sensitive spirit. Tell me that is all, Erica?"

"No, no—oh, Philip, no! It is not that. I never thought again of them, indeed, Philip. I shall be better in the morning. It is nothing."

She stood twisting her wedding-ring round and round her finger, silent for a moment, and then said, falteringly:

"I suppose I am nervous and foolish to-night, Philip, and coming back to the old house——"

She stopped, and St. John asked no more, but bent and gently kissed her brow, holding her again for a moment to his heart, and then he released her.

"Go to your rest, dear child," he said. "Don't wait for me; I have a letter to write."

And, glad to be alone, Erica glided away, and Philip sat down to write again; but he could not command his thoughts somehow to-night, even for a simple letter, and the pen dropped idly from his fingers, for he could not lull into peace the restless, anxious heart that craved so for trust, and yet felt, or fancied, in his almost morbid sensitiveness, that trust was denied him.

Some weight lay on Erica's spirit, the cause of which she withheld from him. The reason she had given him was not all that accounted for the change which had passed over her.

In the fierce light that flashed on him later, under its scathing heat all that perplexed him now seemed clear and distinct. Now it was but vague conjecture.

CHAPTER V.

FAILING IN LOVE AND DUTY.

Philip St. John did not go to London to see his brother, but sent him a letter and a cheque instead, for he did not care to leave Erica alone at Grayle House. She seemed not at all her usual self, sometimes sitting for hours, silent and musing, grave and sad, he thought; at other times bright with a sort of feverish excitement of manner that was scarcely natural.

Was it his fancy, too, that she seemed now and then to shrink from him, while leaning upon him more than she used to? She had, indeed, been the cause of his remaining at Grayle instead of going to town, for she had seemed to dislike the idea of being left alone, and asked him if it was necessary for him to go, and yet had disclaimed any exact wish to keep him from his brother. In truth, she dreaded with a wild fear that Walter should tell Philip the name of this friend of his who was "not of Philip's sort."

Her mind was on the rack as long as Arnold was at Rington—distant about sixteen miles from Grayle—and she lived in these days on suspense, tortured by a thousand fears, and more than all by the necessity of this miserable silence she deemed herself bound to maintain to her husband, and which was a tacit deception.

One evening late in September the girl wandered down to the beach where Poynter's boats lay.

It was quite dark, and a fresh breeze was blowing in from the sea and lifting the loose tresses that fell on her shoulders.

Philip had ridden over to a village some miles away to see a friend, who was staying there, and he would not be back until late; so, weary and sad of heart, Erica had put on her hat and thrown a shawl round her and come down to commune with the sea, as she used to do when a child.

The sea was as sorrowful as herself, she thought, and muttering softly to her as the waves came rolling in almost to her feet.

There was something in the desolation of the scene that exactly chimed in with her mood. The dark skies of water stretching away, it seemed, into infinitude; the bleak rocks rising up to right and left; only here and there a light gleaming from some house up on the hills; the perfect stillness that was intensified by the sullen wash of the ocean.

Erica stood, her fingers lightly interlaced, her hands hanging down loosely before her, the large, mournful eyes looking out with a fixed, changeless gaze into the darkness.

Did it cross her then that she was keeping her vow at a tremendous cost, a cost that outweighed the sanctity of an oath made even to the dying?

It might have done so, but the very words so burned into her brain to her were justification: "at whatever cost to yourself or to others." They shut up any loophole of escape. She could not see one ray of light in all her darkness, so end to the misery that had fallen on her.

She was so absorbed in her own thoughts that a step crushing the shingles did not rouse her. If she heard it at all she probably deemed it that of some fisherman going home, and she started and sprang back almost a pace at the voice that fell on her ear, as she saw the man who stopped before her.

"Arnold," she said, under her breath, "why have you come?"

"To see you, dear coz," Arnold replied, coolly. "I went up to the house, and the servant—housekeeper, I suppose by her venerable looks—told me you were down on the beach, so I came after you."

"What made you go to the house?" said the girl, quickly and sternly.

"Because I knew St. John wasn't there," answered Arnold, laughing. "I saw him over at Melwood, and took care to ascertain from Poynter that he wouldn't be back till late. Poynter is a treasure. He knows everything."

"How long are you going to stay at Rington?" asked Erica, without replying to his remarks.

"The races come off in a week or two; I shall leave after that; if my horse—that is, Fenton, you know—wins I shall be the richer by several hundreds; if he loses I shall have to make myself scarce."

"You, and such as you," she said, slowly, "are enigmas to me. Can you choose a life that literally hangs on the chance of one horse distancing another in a given space? Can you like a life that is one agony of suspense?"

"One gets used to it," he said, shrugging his shoulders, "and, besides, you make so much out of nothing. What you call 'an agony' of suspense, is a sort of pleasurable excitement. I suppose you can't understand it. There's something exhilarating in the thought that you may be rich or a beggar to-morrow, as the turn of the dice or the running of a horse may decide."

"No, I don't understand it. I only know, Arnold, that this life of suspense is killing me."

He started, and a look of shocked wonder came into his face; then he laid his hand on her shoulder.

"What life of suspense?" he said. "Why do you make yourself so unhappy about the whole thing, Erica? I am not worth grieving over so much."

"I cannot forget that we played as children together; that you were once innocent as others are; that you bear a good name, and that you have sullied that name. I cannot forget that you had a mother's love to guard you—and oh," Erica said with sudden passion, clasping her hands over her face, "I cannot forget—would to Heaven I could for one brief moment!—that on me is laid the burden of striving to win you back to honor and duty."

Arnold did not speak, but stood in perfect silence, half amused by the passionate bitterness with which Erica had uttered those words, yet half angered too.

"Why do you try?" he said, sullenly, at length; "it's no earthly use. You've told me often enough that I'm everything that's bad. I can't help it if you are so sensitive as to be wretched because I play and bet, and so on, and because your husband is too honorable to allow his wife to know such a person. Thousands of fellows do the same, Erica; you don't know the world a bit, and think everything dreadful."

"Thousands!" said the girl, clasping her hands together, and suppressing the sterner words that sprang to her lips, "luring themselves to ruin; they 'only' play and bet. And, Arnold, you know well that my husband would not turn from you if you remembered that you bore an honored name."

"I would not sue any man for his favor," said Arnold, haughtily. "I steer my course to please myself, not any man living. For you, Erica," he went on more softly, "I could try to be something more different; but you say yourself I am weak, and if ever one wants to get out of the set I'm in, there are a hundred fellows to pull you back. I won't trouble you much after these races are over. I'll go away abroad again."

"Abroad or at home, Arnold," Erica said, sadly, "you are the same. I cannot shut my eyes to a sorrow because it is not actually at my doors. And you always turn to me for help; how long shall I be able to give it to you? And if Philip were to find out that I helped you——" she shivered uncontrollably, and Arnold said quickly:

"He must not—need not; you would not break your oath, Erica?"

"Have no fear," she answered, with a quiet scorn that stung him. "I deem my honor sacred, and I have sworn to shield your name from public shame. I can do no more than that. Hark!" she said, suddenly bending forward, striving to pierce the darkness, and sinking her voice to a whisper; "did you hear nothing? A step? Go, Arnold; you must not stay."

She put out her hand, laying it with quick force on his arm; but he paused yet a moment.

"Say you forgive me, Erica," he said, earnestly, with one of those flashes of better feeling that veiled to a certain extent his real nature even from her. "Try and think of me less bitterly; try and remember how I love you. You are the only friend I have, Erica."

But she did not heed him, still bending forward, looking up the beach; but suddenly, with an almost frantic gesture pushed him from her.

"Go—go. Oh, for God's sake, leave me," she whispered with white lips. "It is he—Philip."

"Why should I not meet him?" said Arnold, flushing.

"Why?" She turned almost fiercely upon him. "Because I dare not own you as Walter's wild companion. Do you comprehend now?"

He turned quickly then with a low "Good-night," and strode away swiftly through the darkness, and then, with an effort that seemed to almost exhaust all her powers, the girl braced herself to meet Philip calmly, to combat any questions he might ask.

He came down to her, and his first words sent a lightning thrill through every nerve; his tone had in it some displeasure, and his question was almost stern.

"Who was that talking to you, Erica? It is late for you to be out on the beach alone."

Manufacturing Plays.

The Referee relates in the following amusing article the manner in which English dramatists write their plays: Messrs. Jones and Herman when constructing a play invariably hire a large empty room, and bring into it two chairs, a rickety table and a poker. Herman can only invent at a rickety table, and Jones' best dialogue comes only when he is brandishing a poker. Mr. Herman works at the play from 10 a. m. to 6 p. m., then Mr. Jones comes on and works from 6 p. m. to 8 a. m. The two hours' interval is generally required by the charwoman to clear up the sheets of dialogue written and rejected and flung on the floor. Mr. Barrett's great dream speech in "The Silver King" was written 1,468 times before it satisfied the authors and reached its present state of perfection. When the play is thoroughly constructed the hard work begins, as the authors write each act as many as eighty or ninety times. Mr. Herman suffers greatly during collaboration, as Mr. Jones cannot compose without smoking very strong tobacco, and Mr. Herman cannot endure smoke. When the play is quite finished, the authors act the here to each other, and then reject the language they don't like, and suggest business.

Mr. Wills can only write a poetical play where there is a smell of fried fish. When the beautiful speeches in "Claudian" were being written his housekeeper fried so much that the neighbors wrote to the vestry and wanted the post indicted for a nuisance. Mr. Wills generally writes a play in a fortnight, and then gives the MS. to a favorite toy terrier to play with. While he is watching the animal tear the play to pieces, he tries to think how much of it he can remember to write again. All that he remembers he immediately sits down and writes again; he never puts in a line he forgets. By this means the author condenses and obtains, as it were, the juice of the dramatic meat with the superfluous fat skimmed off.

Mr. Henry Pettitt never develops his dramatis personæ at the same place. The villain he works out at home, his hero at Broadstairs, his heroine at Bournemouth, his low comedy man at Margate, and his light comedy lady at Brighton. Mr. Pettitt always wears a billycock hat and shepherd's plaid trousers when writing pathos, and a set of cricketing flannels when writing humor. Mr. Pettitt invariably when constructing his story tries it on the driver of the Havorstock hill omnibus, telling him the story as an actual fact within his own knowledge. What the busman don't understand he explains, and by explaining to the busman explains to himself and to his audience. It is only fair to say that since the climax of one act so affected a driver that he fell off in a fit, and Mr. Pettitt had to drive the 'bus to St. Martin's Church himself, this plan has not been persisted in.

Messrs. Gilbert and Sullivan invariably collaborate by telephone. It is a curious fact that it is Sir Arthur who suggests many of the funny lines and Mr. Gilbert who improvises and whistles some of the most taking airs of the composer. It is not at all an uncommon thing for Mr. Gilbert to run to his telephone in the middle of the night, ring up the exchange, and shout, "Switch me on to Sir Arthur; I want to whistle him a tune I have just composed."

Bismarck's Strength.

Part of the imperial chancellor's supremacy is no doubt due to the fact that he has had time to learn his business. While French foreign ministers flit like phantoms in fast succession through the office on the Quai d'Orsay Prince Bismarck remains immovable. At London, at Vienna, and at Rome foreign ministers come and go; at Berlin there is no change. Having got his ablest subject in office Emperor William kept him there against all gainsayers, until the unanimous voice of united Germany acclaimed the wisdom of his voice. Only at St. Petersburg was there for a time a similar fixity of purpose and continuity of control. But there also time has brought its changes, and at this moment there is not a nation in Europe whose foreign affairs are directed by the same man who was in office when Prince Bismarck became first minister of Prussia. Another secret of his ascendancy has been the prestige born of uninterrupted triumph. Nothing succeeds like success, and no man of our time has been so successful as the German chancellor. But after every allowance has been made for the advantage of positions and of good fortune there remains the decisive element of his personality. A keen insight into the vital facts of the subjects with which he has to deal, a clear perception of the ends to be sought, and readiness to adopt the most effective methods by which he could attain them, and an undaunted resolution in pressing onward toward his goal—these qualities rarely have been found in such admirable combination as in the character of Prince Bismarck.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A tomato canner says the cause of poisoning from eating canned tomatoes is this: When the can is opened and only a portion of the contents removed, the air acts upon the tin and develops the poison. The can should be emptied all at once, and the unused portion put in an earthen vessel.

A Valuable Find.

Mr. Isaac Brown, of Bothwell, declares that he found one bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters worth $500 to him. It cured him of Salt Rheum from which he had suffered years after other treament had failed to relieve. 3t

The man who prides himself on always speaking his mind, is the first one to kick when he finds anybody else exercising the same privilege.

Husband and Wife.

Mr. James More and wife, well known in Leamington, were both chronic sufferers from dyspepsia that the best medical aid failed to relieve. Three bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters cured both husband and wife. 33-3t

The schoolmaster had fallen asleep, and the scholars were taking advantage of it. Suddenly, in the midst of the racket, lightning struck the building, and the teacher, rousing himself, said sternly: "The boy who made that noise will have to stay after school." And then he fell asleep again.

Strong Adjectives.

"It sells immensely, and in fact it has the largest sale of any patent medicine in Sumner," says J. F. Smith, druggist, Dunnville, of Fowler's Wild Strawberry. The great remedy for Summer Complaints. 33-3t

"What caused your little boy's sickness?" asked a plain mother of a mother whose little son was very ill. "He was climbing a ladder," said the lady, "and lost his equilibrium." "Poor little fellow," said the sympathetic women; "do buy him another; he'll be more careful the next time!"

"Boy, how much do you want for that string of fish?" asked an amateur fisherman on his way home from a day's sport. The boy named his price. "All right, there's your money. Now just throw me the fish," and he dexterously caught them. "Talk about catching fish," he said, as he pursued his way.

An Austin boy kept on throwing his cap into the air and catching it, after his father had told him to keep it on his head. Finally his father lost patience. After a brief but painful interview, the parent threw away the strap and asked: "Now, do you know where your cap should have been?" "Yes, sir," sobbed the boy, rubbing himself, "it should have been under my clothes."

The best for Butter.

There is but one best color for butter, and that is Wells Richardson & Co's. Improved Butter Color, no candid investigator doubts. It is the best butter color in the world; is free from sediment and impurity, always ready for instant use, and it imparts to butter that rich dandelion yellow, without a tinge of red, which is the acme of desirability in any butter color.

Some college boys after dark took an entire load of wood from a farmer's sled, left in the street over night, and with great labor piled it in a citizen's woodshed under the impression that he'd be charged for stealing it. They now find that he had bought the wood, and they have saved the farmer so much work, and they want to find out who suggested the joke, and how much the farmer paid him.

'Ah weel,' says Jamie, 'you're no needin' siller then,' and walked on. Payment indefinitely postponed.

What it has Done.

MRS. GEORGE SIMPSON, Toronto, says: "I have suffered severely with corns, and was unable to get relief from treatment of any kind until I was recommended to try Holloway's Corn Cure. After applying it for a few days I was enabled to remove the corn, root and branch—no pain whatever, and no inconvenience in using it. I can't heartily recommend it to all suffering from corns."

"Several queer incidents," says the Washington correspondent of the Chicago Inter-Ocean, "have occured lately at the top of Washington Monument. The other day a gaunt and hungry cat made her appearance on the scaffolding where the workmen stand, having climbed the winding flights of stairs from the bottom. She looked wildly about her for a few moments, and then gave a leap into space. Four hundred and thirty-four feet is a good deal of a jump, but she landed on the ground alive, making the greatest leap on record.

TWO FACES.

Mrs. Jenks called on Amy's mother one day, and as soon as the little girl saw her she exclaimed:

"Oh, Mrs. Jenks, please let me see your back!"

"Why?" asked Mrs. Jenks, somewhat surprised.

"Because" said Amy, 'When I asked mamma what a hypocrite was she said it was a person like Mrs. Jenks, with a face in front and a face in the back of her head."

The Weak and the Impure.

The merry little mountain brook, as it lightly dances over the rocks and sparkles in the sunshine on its way down to the river, is pure and clean. It is active; therefore, it is healthy. It is vigorous therefore, it resists impurity.

But the sluggish pool where the current is not strong enough to keep the water in motion, is stagnant and foul. Dirt and rubbish are thrown into it, and stay there. Impurities and vile odors make it a breeder of disease and an object to be avoided.

When the blood is strong and rich and red, and vigorously courses its accustomed rounds through arteries and veins, the system is hearty and healthy.

When the blood is thin and poor and weak, impurities and defilements creep into it, and it has no strength to cast them out. Then the system runs down.

Shaker Blood Syrup purifies and enriches the Blood; curing Scrofula, Cancer, Rheumatism, Catarrh, Ulcers and Skin and Blood diseases of every description.

LAND OF EASY MARRIAGES.

Chicago Bride—Thank fortune, the fuss is over and we are off at last.

Chicago Bridegroom—Yes, my pet, I agree with you in that as in everything. How perfectly we are suited to each other. I wonder if it will always be so?

Chicago Bride—Always, darling; for even if not matrimonially suited, we can easily be divorce suited, you know.

The Opinion of All.

Who have tried Polson's NERVILINE, the great pain remedy is that it is never-failing in pain of every description. Neuralgia, toothache, cramps, pain in the stomach, and kindred complaints are banished as if by magic. Rapid and certain in operation, pleasant to take, Nerviline stands at the very front rank of remedies of this class. A trial bottle may be purchased for 10 cents, a very small amount in any case; but the best expenditure you can make, if a sufferer from any kind of pain, is a 10 or 25 cent bottle of Nerviline at druggists and country dealers.

A HUMAN SHEAF.

F. W. Wilcocks of Puslinch Township had a rather strange experience on Monday. He was cutting barley with a self-binder when the seat upon which he sat broke. He was thrown on to the platform, carried over the elevators, and tied with cord just the same as if he were a sheaf of barley. Mr. Wilcocks naturally feels indignant at the treatment he received, but in this the age of invention, it is not at all to be wondered at.

Thousands Say So.

Mr. T. W. Atkins, Girard, Kan., writes: "I never hesitate to recommend your Electric Bitters to my customers, they give entire satisfaction and are rapid sellers." They will save hundreds of dollars in doctor's bills every year. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by Taylor & McDonald. 33-2t

WHAT MADE HIM MAD.

'Yes,' said the colonel. 'I was on a jury in California once. It was a murder trial. I didn't want the fellow hung, and so stuck out against the other eleven for nine days looked up in the jury room, when they gave in, and we brought in a verdict of not guilty. And I think I was the maddest man in the State.' 'Why, what were you mad about, colonel?' 'Cause the mob had hung the prisoner the first day we were locked up.'

Accident.

On Monday Mr. Frank White, met with a serious accident. He was going in his hack to the O. & Q., Station, and, being late was driving rapidly. A heavy trunk which was on top of the hack, rolled against him, and he was thrown to the ground between the horses and the hack. The front wheel of the latter passed over his shoulders and the hind wheel over his left leg breaking it at the ankle, Dr. King gave the required surgical attendance and Mr. White is getting on favorably.

Photographing the Town.

On Tuesday Mr. Williamson, view photographer of Port Hope, was in town, the guest of Mr. VanEvery, Charlotte street, and he took advantage of the occasion to take some very successful photographic views of objects of interest in the town. Two views of the residence of Geo. A. Cox, Esq., Mayor were taken, one of "Hazel Brae" Home, two bird's-eye views of the town from "Smithtown Hill," two of the residence of Thos. Menzies, Esq., Councillor, one of the post office block, and two of George street, from Brock, looking south.

Accident.

On Friday a little son of Mr. John Garvey, Grocer, George street, accompanied his father's porter to the Midland Station. The lad was left in the wagon, while the porter went into the office, the horse became frightened and started, throwing the lad out, his temple and side of his head struck some object with a sharp edge and cut a scalp gash about four inches in length. He was at once removed to Dr. King's surgery, where several stitches were put in the wound, the plucky little fellow bearing the sharp piercing pain without a word. He is getting on well.

British Empire Life.

We learn from Montreal, says the Monetary Times, that the Exchange Bank Buildings, on corner of Notre Dame and Francois Xavier streets, in that city, have been purchased by the British Empire Mutual Life Assurance Company. This is a step in accordance with the liberal policy which that company has adopted, of seeking Canadian investment for the money paid in by its Canadian policy-holders, and indeed for much of its funds besides, for it has already something like half a million invested in Canada, in addition to this latest purchase. The price paid was $110,000, while the original cost including land was over $200,000. The site of the building is an excellent one; at the intersection of the Canadian Wall Street by the Montreal Broadway, and we shall expect to see the British Empire Mutual do an increasing life business therein. Mr. E. E. Henderson is the resident agent for this section of country, for the above company.

Peterborough as A Market.

Peterborough has always had the reputation of being a first class farmer's market and a circumstance happened a day or two ago which greatly strengthened her claims. Last week, Webster of Cobourg and Carey of Grafton, fancying that Montreal was the only place to sell hogs, shipped two carloads to that market and sold them. About the same time Messrs. Matthews & Son of the Peterborough Pork Packing establishment needed a supply of hogs and their agent in Montreal then purchased the Cobourg and Grafton porkers after they were once sold, and they were reshipped to them, and 65 of them were slaughtered on Monday last. Messrs. Webster and Carey must feel chagrined to think they were slow enough to ship hogs to Montreal when the enterprise and extent of business of Messrs. Matthews & Son, afforded a better market at their very door. Next time, gentlemen don't "drive your pigs to the wrong market" but bring them to Peterboro.'

Fire! Fire! Fire!

On Sunday evening, about ten o'clock, a fire broke out in Hopkins' livery stables, Chambers street, and before the flames could be subdued the stables were burned, as well as the adjacent stables of Halpin's hotel, to which the fire quickly spread. For a time the hotel itself was in danger, but the steamer, after getting to work threw two excellent streams. The fire was just without the hydrant limits, and the water from the water works was not available. The livery stable building, owned by Mr. Wm. Claxton, was insured. Mr. Thos. Darcy had about $300 worth of coal stoves stored in the stables. These, being uninsured, are a complete loss. Mr. Halpin had $200 of an insurance. Later in the night the sheds on the northern part of the Agricultural grounds were fired. The firemen, who had scarcely got home from the first fire, turned out and put the fire out. Before they had left the spot a fire was started in the southern range of sheds, which was easily extinguished.

A Double Runaway.

Tuesday evening Messrs. Harry LeBrun and E. C. Crevier, V.S., met with a startling accident as they were driving down George street. While crossing Brock street, a horse driven by Mrs. Wm. Lasher, coming from the east on Brock street, became restive and, at the post office tank, broke into a run. Striking the hind wheels of Dr. Crevier's buggy it was upset and the occupants pitched out. The horse began plunging and kicking, and made a rush, the buggy striking a hitching post at the Bank of Commerce. The horse broke loose, leaving part of the harness and the vehicle behind him, and he did not stop running till he reached Mr. Wm. Walton's farm, second line of Smith. Mrs. Lasher's horse ran on without doing any damage till it struck the slope west of the railway track, when it stopped. Dr. Grevier was entirely unhurt, while the luck of the "Golden Horseshoe" saved Mr. LeBrun from serious injury. However, his right leg was hurt a little, and a ten-dollar pair of pants ruined. These can be replaced at cost at the "Golden Horseshoe," where the best clothing in town is to be procured.

THE ART LOAN EXHIBITION.

The Highly Successful Effort of the Y.M.C.A.

The exhibition of art works and of scientific, natural and foreign curosities, opened in the Post Office Block last week, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., and continued with large and increasing attendance to the last day. The exhibition was divided into three departments. The visitor, on entering was ushered into the gallery of curiosities, which comprise a fine and, to use the word, so much ill-used, oppositely, exquisite collection of curiosities and objects of interest, arranged in a very felicitous manner.

The next room was devoted to engravings, of which a large number were hung, and all of superior attractiveness, all engraved from the original pictures of great artists.

The next and largest apartment was given over to oil paintings and water colors, and the collection was a splendid one, every picture being worthy of a position on the walls. It is not incumbent to criticise the pictures—many of them are above criticism—while as to others, though they might not have been of surpassing excellence, it would hardly be a gracious recognition of the kindness of any gentleman who loans a valuable picture to have an amateur critic dub it a daub. The following catalogue furnishes a full list of the pictures and objects of art represented, with the painters' names and the names of the generous loaners, to whose kindness the public are indebted for so high a treat as the exhibition has proved to be:

TOWN COUNCIL.

Special Meeting For General Business.

A special meeting of the town council was held on Monday, August 18th, 1884. Present, His worship Geo. A. Cox, Esq., in the chair, Messrs Cahill, Davidson, Allen, Kelly, Green, Douglass, Rutherford, Menzies and Kenrry.

After routine

COMMUNICATIONS.

were received

From R. B. Rogers stating that he had the extension of Water street surveyed, and that great difficulty had been experienced in securing a starting point.

From the president of the Home for incurables, Toronto, acknowledging receipt of $1,000 payment of keep of Isabella Drummond for life. The clerk said he had received $750 from relatives, their share of the above amount.

From W. H. Moore stating that he had been instructed by Robert Rowe to move to quash by-law 471, permitting Wm. Yelland to put in a switch on Bethune street—on the ground of lack of notice. Referred to Town solicitor for his opinion as to the validity of the by-law.

From T. Guerin asking the council to pay $12.50, the funeral expences of the late John McDonald. Referred to the charity committee with power to act.

From R. B. Edwards, asking for apartments in Bank of Toronto buildings, till required for use of the town—Referred to the Finance committee.

From Richard Hall and others complaining of the smoke stack of Baptie's planing mill as a nuisance, and requesting the council to take steps to suppress it—Referred to Fire, Water and Gas committee to report.

From Wm. Clanton and eight others stating that the drain on Hunter street was useless and requesting the council to put down a brick cylinder drain by local tax.

The consideration of this matter provoked a long talk, several members more or less irrelevantly discussed the propriety of emptying the proposed sewer into the George street sewer.

The Mayor stated that the question of a general system of sewerage was of vital importance to the town, and one that ought to be dealt with at once in some way or other. There ought to be spent in sewerage from $100,000 to $150,000, and in such a way that the payment of the amount should be distributed over a long space of time so that the present generation would not alone have to pay it.

Mr. Kelly pointed out that the George street drain poured noxious effluvia into the cellars connected with it.

Mr. Stevenson being heard on the subject said it was singular that this Hunter street drain, which he could get four doctors to make affidavit, was a public nuisance and detrimental to public health, had not received the attention of the Board of Health. It was insufficient when built and it was absurd to think that it could be effective. His tenants were complaining and he had told them to bring an action and he would pay the costs. If corporation action were not taken, legal action would be taken and there could be no doubt of the result.

Mr. Lech asserted the urgent necessity of sewerage on George street; he did not think sewers should be paid by local tax, unless the frontage tax principle should be applied to all improvements. The time would come when legislation would compel all towns of a certain size to provide an efficient system of sewerage.

Mr. Cahill thought the sewer on George street was good enough to carry off the sewerage on Hunter street, and he favoured the construction of the drain on the petitioners' terms.

Referred to Street and Bridge Committee.

ACCOUNTS

were presented from

Times Printing Co.	$13 00
Registrar of Peterborough	7 55
John Bell, price of vehicle spring broken at G. & Q. railway crossing	1 50
H. C. Rogers, postage (pd.)	4 00
J. Robertson, work on Hunter st. creek	12 00
R. B. Rogers, surveying	25 35

Of the above accounts those so marked were paid, and the others referred to appropriate committees.

FIRE WATER AND GAS.

Mr. Rutherford introduced the report of this committee, recommending that the offer of the Water Works company to forego their claim against the town for watering streets outside of water limits, providing that the ratepayers living on certain streets in the centre of the town, sign petitions for the extension of fire protection to the number of hydrants required for such protection—26 hydrants in all over and above the hydrants now laid down on portion of Water street and also Aylmer street, be accepted and that the persons interested at once take the proper steps to have the required number of ratepayers sign the same; this water Company also require this corporation to erect stand pipes, say six in all for street watering purposes.

All which is respectfully submitted.

A. RUTHERFORD.

Peterborough Aug. 18th, 1884.

Report adopted.

CENTRAL PARK.

Mr. Cahill moved, seconded by Mr. Davidson, that the "Old Burying Ground" be hereafter known as the "Central Park," and that the Joint Committee be instructed to dispose of the sheds and fence thereon, the proceeds to be applied to the fencing and improvement of the grounds.—Carried.

Mr. Rutherford complained that it was not fair to take the matter out of the hands of the Joint Committee.

Mr. Kelly and Mr. Allin thought it was time to take action if the Park was to be used by the public before winter.

The motion was carried.

Mr. Rutherford referred to the shameful carelessness of leaving stones and boulders to obstruct the streets. Chambers street was deeply littered with rubbish, thus causing danger from fires.

Mr. Cahill said that there were men employed removing the stones, and the rubbish on Chambers street would be dealt with as soon as certain building operations were concluded.

Mr. Loch complained of wooden buildings within the fire limits.

SPAULDING'S BAY.

Mr. Allin moved, seconded by Mr. Davidson, that steps at once be taken to raise the water in Spaulding's Bay by damming it at George street, as recommended by the Street and Bridge Committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. Cahill gave notice of motion to provide for a joint committee of the Council and citizens to consider the question of providing a suitable park for the town.

BETHUNE STREET SWITCH.

Mr. Douglass moved, seconded by Mr. Rutherford, that no action be taken in regard to the arbitration in respect of the Bethune street switch till the Town Solicitor report as to the validity of the by-law.

Mr. Douglass said the by-law was not worth the paper it was written on.

Motion agreed to.

HUNTER STREET BRIDGE.

Mr. Cahill moved, seconded by Mr. Davidson, that the Street and Bridge Committee be instructed to re-build the bridge on Hunter street at once.

Mr. Cahill said that the Town Trust Commissioners, in compliance with a motion passed, were willing to advance the money, or, if there were legal objections to raising the money this way, the bridge should be built at any rate.

In reply to Mr. Menzies, Mr. Cahill said the cost of the bridge ($2,500) would not be put in the estimates this year if it could be got in any other way.

Mr. Menzies said there should be great care in piling up expenses.

Mr. Davidson argued that the price of the proposed bridge had been met by exceptional income, and that was a reason why the amount should be placed in this year's estimates. A considerable amount had been received from the sale of town lots and the payment of the Ashburnham debt, and the ratepayers would not feel the amount of the cost of the bridge.

In reply to Mr. Rutherford, the Clerk said that the expenditure on streets, etc., had to date been $4,785.

The motion was referred to the Finance Committee, with power to act.

YORK PIONEERS.

Mr. Kelly called attention to the coming visit of the York Pioneers—on the 26th inst.—and suggested that steps be taken to show the visitors becoming courtesies.

At length, after considerable talk,

Mr. Kelly moved, seconded by Mr. Kendry, that in the absence of the Mayor, Mr. Rutherford act as Chairman of the Council in the matter of the reception of the York Pioneers on their visit to Peterborough on August 26th.

The motion was carried on the following division:

YEAS.—Messrs. Cahill, Davidson, Allin, Kelly, Green, Douglass, Rutherford, Kendry and Cox.

NAY.—Mr. Menzies.

The Council adjourned at eleven o'clock, to meet at the call of the Mayor.

Another large shipment of Goods just received at Turnbull's, comprising new designs in Dress Goods, Mantles and Ulster Cloths, Feather Trimmings, Cut Plushes, etc. If you hear of anything new in the Dry Goods line look for it at Turnbull's.

WEST RIDING AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—As a farmer I am naturally interested in what concerns my class, and I am more than grieved, I am disgusted, at the disgraceful condition in which the exhibitions of the West Riding Society have fallen. It is bad enough of itself, but when compared with the success accomplished by other places, the town and West Riding of Peterboro have cause to hang and hide its diminished head. Why, Sir, just look at Lindsay, for example, a mere country village compared to Peterborough, and notice the Grand Central Exhibition they are to hold there this fall. The large sum of $2,500 is to be given in prizes, and some special features are to be introduced to add to the interest of the show, which is to last three days, such as a military display, a bicycle parade and other attractions. They go into the matter with spirit, and I have no doubt they will have a splendid show, crowded by thousands of visitors, while we will, on the same date, have a poor, sickly exhibition, with a few people lounging about the gates of the grounds. And again, look at Collingwood, with a population of only 5,000. The prospectus of the Great Northern Agricultural Society, which is to hold its first annual exhibition in that town on the 30th Sept. and two following days, has the promise that the exhibition will be the greatest ever held north of Toronto. The park comprises 20 acres, with commodious buildings and pavillion on which $6,000 has been expended, a half mile track, and stables with a siding to them from the railway track. The prize list includes upwards of $3,000 in premiums, and a fair number of attractions of various kinds are to be provided. Now, what these comparatively one-horse places can do, Peterborough could do if the right sort of men were at the head of the Agricultural Society, men who are alive and able to get out of the rut into which they have got stuck. If the present Board of Directors are not grossly incompetent, they have shown themselves to be not competent, for, under their management, or, rather, mismanagement, the society has been going down for years, till now it is expending what little strength it has left in a dying struggle. I don't pretend to say who is individually to blame, but there is a great lack somewhere, and if the present directors don't intend to do better, and they give no sign of it, it would be wise for them to resign and make way for live men who would take hold of the Society and bring it back to life. At present the whole affair is a disgraceful farce, not as good an exhibition as some of our neighboring township shows. It is high time a reform was worked in the matter.

Yours truly,
AGRICULTURIST.

AN HOUR WITH DR. BARNARDO.

Rescue of Human Wrecks from the Seething Sea of London Misery.

Graphic Sketch of Dr. Barnardo's Great Work—His Description of the Waifs and Strays of London—The Way the Work is Wrought—The Work, its Success and Extent—Hazel Brae Branch—Peterborough Generosity.

On Thursday evening last Dr. T. J. Barnardo, the great practical London philanthropist, delivered a discourse of thrilling interest on the subject of the "Waifs and Strays" of the world's Metropolis, London.

At the hour for beginning every seat in the capacious Opera House was occupied, both floor and galleries, and supplementary seats had to be furnished. John Burnham, Esq., M. P. for East Peterborough, occupied the chair, and there were on the platform, besides, the following reverend gentlemen and gentlemen:—Rev. Mr. Davis, Rev. Mr. Brown, St. John's, Rev. Mr. Manning, Charlotte-street Methodist, Rev. Mr. Bell, St. Andrew's, Rev. Mr. McAmmond, Ashburnham Methodist, Rev. Mr. Blaine, locum tenens of Rev. Mr. Torrance, Geo. A. Cox, Esq., and Mr. Edward Duff, Superintendent of Hazel Brae.

The hymn, "Rescue the Perishing," was sung, and Rev. Mr. Brown offered prayer.

The chairman said he had much pleasure in being present on the occasion, and the large audience present was a proof of the great interest the people of Peterborough felt in the work carried on by Dr. Barnardo, who was well known to all by reputation—in fact his name was a household word. He highly commended the noble work in which he was engaged. Citizens of Canada could not, from the absence of want and misery here, appreciate the great work carried on among the teeming millions of London. He said he had learned from the report that, eighteen years ago, Dr. Barnardo had become interested in one homeless boy, and from that interest had sprung many well-organized and well-equipped homes, giving shelter and instruction to about 1,300 otherwise homeless orphans. The revenue for the support of these homes had increased from $1,000 a year to $225,000. He dealt with the objections of some persons to the introduction of such children into Canada. The feeling was not general, for there was room in this broad Dominion for every soul likely to become a good and industrious citizen. The sympathy of Peterborough was more directly aroused, owing to the beneficence and bounty of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. A. Cox, by whose liberality a branch of the homes had been set up here. (Cheers.) But he (the chairman) said the work appealed to more than their sympathy—it demanded their contributions, which he had no doubt would be given willingly.

Dr. Barnardo, who on coming forward was received with warm applause, said that in dealing with his subject he was at a loss how to make his audience understand the conditions upon which the work was founded. The object of the work was to rescue the perishing especially as they existed amongst homeless boys and girls. London was described as the largest city in the world, and its population was rapidly growing. London was too full as well as the old country, and it was impossible to find work and subsistence for all. With the prosperity that reigned in Canada, the people could not understand the misery and homelessness that marked London in which there were vast numbers without a home, and homelessness in London meant far more than its same condition in Peterborough. There were thousands of outcast poor without a home, without social life, who had fallen off the lowest step of social life. Of these homeless ones the licensed "Lodging Houses" only took in 29,000, and the unlicensed houses as many more, while the balance of the homeless slept on the street, under archways, in coal carts, on roofs or anywhere the police would leave them unmolested. All these were poor, degraded, and lived by begging, stealing and crime. Many of these people had brought themselves down by drink and improvidence, but if these were to blame, the thousand of children they degraded along with themselves were not to blame, and it was to the rescue of these unfortunates from lives of shame, sin, crime and misery that his work was addressed. He had found by actual observation that 2½ out of every hundred of homeless were children under 14, exposed to the temptations of lives of sin and crime.

ORIGIN OF THE WORK.

Dr. Barnardo told how eighteen years ago, while studying medicine his philanthropy found an outlet in teaching a night school. One night a lad remained in the warm school room, and begged to stay all night. He said that he was an orphan and homeless. The Dr. could hardly credit his story, and when the lad told him that there were "heaps on 'em" in the same condition, piloted by the little fellow, he visited the rag exchange in Petticoat Lane, where was found a dozen children huddled on the roof of a building like dogs. He stood by the boy and got others interested in him, and before long there was established in Stepney Causeway the first Home. (cheers.) Here he had beds for 25 boys, and casting his net into the seething sea of London misery he caught enough to fill them. He detailed graphically the difficulty of securing the confidence of the Arabs whose sad experience even in tender years, had made them cynical and suspicious. But he trusted in God, and

and as he became better known he had less difficulty in getting his recruits. Since the first year step after step had been taken, till the work had branched off into twenty three institutions. When the boys entered the homes they were educated and taught some useful trade. The speaker gave instances of boys who had been successful and were now occupying useful and honest stations in life. But there were more women than men in England and more homeless girls than boys. The position of these made it impossible for him to fully pourtray their danger and their future, if unassisted. There were thousands of these who did not know what a bed or a bath was, and their mental and moral ignorance was of the same character. Yet hundreds of them retained, amidst their vicious surroundings, the instincts of virtue, and were capable, if rescued, of becoming respectable and useful members of society. The rescued girls lived in cottages—20 in a cottage—with a matron and the genuine routine of a Christian family, with a family life, family love, and taught household knowledge and fitted for an industrious life. Scores of these girls had been sent to Canada, and were doing well and leading useful lives. This formed the connection between his work and Canada. The homes educated and trained them, and was sent to Canada. There were only sent to Canada the good girls. He denied that they sent here the morally and physically tainted. They rescued such, but they did not send them to Canada. They had long hoped to found in this country a and the generous offer of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. A. Cox had become the realization of these hopes. It had been fitted up through the liberality of the citizens of Peterborough, which he wished to warmly acknowledge. Of the children brought to Canada all were doing well, except two or three, and these had not been trained in the "Homes." He reserved his thanks, from the bottom of his heart, to those who had assisted in the work, but he further appealed to their sympathy and assistance. He stated that $30 would maintain a child one year in the Home, and a lesser amount a proportionate time. They had at the Home at present several fine girls fit for adoption, and the public were cordially invited to visit the Home at Hazel Brae. The conclusion of Dr. Barnardo's remarks was the signal for cordial applause.

Mr. Geo. A. Cox, in a few words, said he wished to acknowledge the gifts so far received. There was no desire to impose a burden on the people of Peterborough. He had explained to Dr. Barnardo that the conditions in England and Canada were widely different. Here there was less wealth and greater demands, for instance, for building churches, in which respect the Old Country was already provided. He pointed out that the Home could be supported without burdening any one. He believed as the work became better known the money would come in, not from the town alone, but from the whole Province. He believed that the former occupants of the Home who were doing well in Canada, would in time contribute largely to the support of it. The work needed the sympathy and prayers of the public, with

AN OCCASIONAL DOLLAR THROWN IN.

He would read a list of the yearly subscriptions received, which he had received casually and without making any special effort—the work of one afternoon:—A lady, who did not wish her name to be known, $250 per year for three years; Mr. A. White, $50; Dr. Kinsold, $50; W. Gooderham, Toronto, $50; R. Jaffray, Toronto, $50; J. R. Dundas, M.P., Lindsay, $50; J. M. Ferris, M.P.P., Campbellford, $50; John Burnham, M.P., $25. Mr. Cox also read a list of those who contributed to the furnishing of Hazel Brae, which list we published in THE EXAMINER at the time of the opening of the Home. Mr. Cox thanked these contributors for their liberality.

Rev. Mr. Tovell moved, seconded by Rev. Mr. Blaine, a vote of thanks to Dr. Barnardo for his interesting discourse, and a vote of thanks was also tendered the chairman. The meeting dispersed, the remarks of the audience, on retiring, showing that the address had aroused a warm interest and created a deep sympathy with Dr. Barnardo's work.

GUARDING AGAINST FIRE.

New Fire Proof Picker Room at Brodie's Woolen Mills.

Brodie's Woolen mills, since their establishment have been progressing and improving both in business, equipment and area of premises, and now another step forward has been taken in the construction of a fireproof picker room. In many woolen factories pickers are generally credited with being a fruitful source of fires, and this room has been constructed fireproof to minimise this danger from fire. The picker room is situated in the formerly vacant space between the main building and the dye house. It is 48x25 feet in area, one story in height. The walls are of stone, the western wall resting against the bank. The roof is covered with asbestos roofing. The floor is covered with iron plates eighteen to the inch. The doors are also plated with iron and the windows provided with iron shutters. The equipment will consist of one of Barker's burr pickers, (new) and an English picker and duster. This building is in every respect as far as possible fire-proof, especially against the fires that may arise from the use of the pickers. In addition the walls of the boiler house, which were before of wood, have been replaced by brick walls, the wooden doors being replaced with iron ones.

IMPROVEMENTS COMPLETED AND PROSPECTIVE.

Since Messrs. Brodie & Son opened the mill they have added about $3,000 in various improvements in equipment. It is now contemplated to put an elevator in the staircase tower erected last summer.

On the riverside of the main building an addition, 60x17, and three stories in height, is to be made this fall, to make room for the necessary machinery to make the factory a three-set mill.

In the dye house a new iron exhaust fan has been placed on the line shaft which will force out the steam, vapors and odours arising from dying operations.

A new rotary force pump has been put in and four hundred feet of hose put in to further provide against danger from fire.

These improvements, which indicate commendable push and enterprise on the part of Messrs. Brodie, have been substantially made under the capable supervision of Mr. Nathaniel Shaw.

Turnbull has just received a large shipment of corsets, in all the latest and most improved makes.

FRASERVILLE.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

The Rev. F. Johnston returned home on Tuesday, 12th of August. He had a very pleasant voyage both going to and returning from Ireland, and feels better than he has been wont to feel for some time.

During his absence Rev. Mr. Balfour took charge. He became very popular and when his time elapsed he had no desire to leave, and the people were very reluctant in parting with him.

A gentleman living one mile north of Fraserville, while out looking for some apples to eat, perceived a few nice ones on the top of the tree. On securing them he found they were roasted almost to the core by the heat of the sun. Its unnecessary to say its rather warm around here.

We have been informed that Mr. Robinson intends leaving this village. Messrs A. Laukie and A. Stewart, both farmers in the vicinity, have purchased or are about to purchase his stock, as they are both live men undoubtedly a magnificent business can be worked up. We wish them marked success. We also wish Mr. Robinson marked success in whatever business he may engage in.

Heretofore, we are requested to say, the officials of the Midland Division of the Grand Trunk Railway, have acted very liberally indeed, towards us in this place, and seldom, if ever, had we reason to complain until now, but verily now have we great reason to cry for a continuance of "fair play," due people to Peterborough our great marketing town. People are allowed to purchase Market tickets on the morning train of Saturday, and are allowed to return on no train but the Mail which leaves Peterboro' 11.30, a.m. Now is it reasonable to expect our women to do their marketing, buy their goods and be through in time to return at 11.30 a.m.? We think it is not, and would kindly ask the Officials to attend to our wants and allow us as we now want to, to return home by the means of the Express which leaves town at 3.30 p. m. As that train is not marked on the time table to stop here, it renders it very inconvenient for the people in this part, and truly it would excite feelings of joy throughout the vicinity if, ere long the express from here 3.33 p. m., was marked on the time table to stop as it has done in the past. We hope the above will be attended to and conclusions arrived at pleasing to us.

PETERBOROUGH, AUGUST 21, 1884.

Wheat Crop of Ontario.

The report of the Bureau of Industries for August gives a cheering account of the wheat crop of the Province. The fall wheat appears to have made steady improvement throughout the season, and in localities where it was regarded as hardly worth saving in May, good harvests have been reaped. The moderately cool weather and occasional rain showers favored continuous growth and healthy maturity, and the grain is an excellent sample, being plump, hard and bright. In a few localities it was attacked by the midge and weevil, but the extent of injury by these pests is not appreciable on the aggregate crop. Reaping began in the south-western counties of the Province about the middle of July, and by the 1st of August the bulk of the crop was cut and much of it safely housed. The harvest weather being very favorable, the grain has been gathered in first-rate condition. Accounts of the spring wheat are equally good, excepting for the northern and north-eastern counties, where its growth was checked by the drought of June. But even in these districts it promises a fair yield, while in the Lake Ontario, West Midland, Georgian Bay and Lake Huron counties it is reported to be better than for many years. It will be fully ripe about the middle of the month, and with a continuance of the present weather the quality will at least equal that of the fall wheat. The following table gives the area and proportion of the crops of this year and last year—the production of the present harvest being based on the estimates of 1,150 correspondents:—

	1884		1883
	Acres.	Bushels.	Acres.	Bushels.
F. Wheat...	894,691	17,408,266	1,091,467	11,927,830
S. Wheat....	730,892	13,294,941	586,410	9,735,092
Totals ...	1,585,583	30,632,697	1,677,877	21,323,922

The bad harvest of fall wheat last year and the comparatively good harvest of spring wheat account for the decreased area of the one crop and the increased area of the other this year.

FALL WHEAT CROP.

The fall wheat, according to returns up to Aug. 14th, promises an average yield of 21½ bushels, and the spring wheat of 18½ bushels per acre,—the average of both being 20 bushels, and the aggregate production exceeds last year's harvest by 10,360,000 bushels. Barley was a good crop in the southern and south-western counties of the Province, but in the northern and north-eastern counties it was affected by the summer drought. The grain, though plump and heavy, was in large areas discoloured by the rain-showers of the last week of July. The accounts of the oat crop are much the same as for barley, but, being two or three weeks later in ripening, it has been greatly benefitted by the July rains, and the yield will possibly exceed the estimate. The area in rye is much less than last year, and the average yield about the same. Peas is a bountiful crop, and it is ripening under the most favourable circumstances. The pea-bug has done much less harm than usual this year, and in many localities throughout the west it has hardly appeared at all.

The area and production of the foregoing crops for two successive harvests are given as follows:

	1884		1883
	Acres.	Bushels.	Acres.	Bushels.
Wheat	1,625,583	30,632,697	1,677,877	21,323,922
Barley	791,435	17,860,777	757,155	15,414,327
Oats	1,485,620	49,263,620	1,418,320	44,373,620
Rye	104,141	1,620,417	128,111	3,013,240
Peas	570,688	13,106,082	542,717	10,073,752

The hay crop was injured to some extent by the frosts of the last week in May, and and more seriously by the drouth of June. The yield is estimated at 3,044,912 tons, or about 1,000,000 tons less than last year. The appearance of the corn crop is not promising, due partly to inferior seed, and partly to the low temperature prevailing throughout June and July. The fortune of the crop depends on the weather of August and September. The area planted is 174,834 acres. Beans have suffered from the drought and the cool weather, and they will mature a week or ten days later than usual. The plants, however, are strong and healthy, and being well loaded a good crop is likely to be gathered—the estimate being 552,953 bushels from an area of 24,877 acres. The reports of the root crops are generally favorable. Potatoes are excellent, and mangolds and carrots are fairly good. Turnips made slow growth at first, owing to the dry weather, but the recent rains have been very beneficial. The area in potatoes is 168,862 acres; in mangolds, 18,341 acres; in carrots, 10,980 acres; and in turnips, 104,108 acres. The total area in roots is 302,291 acres, or about 8,500 more than last year.

Mrs. A. Nelson, Brantford, writes: "I was a sufferer from Caronic Dyspepsia for eleven years. Always after eating an intense burning sensation in the stomach, at times very distressing, caused a drooping and languid feeling which would last for several hours after eating. I was recommended by Mr. Applewell, Chemist, of our city, to try Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyspeptic Cure, and I am thankful to say that I have not been better for years; that burning sensation and languid feeling have all gone, and food does not lie heavy on my stomach. Others of my family have used it with best results."

Henry Clement, Almonte, writes: "For a long time I was troubled with Chronic rheumatism, at times wholly disabled. I tried anything and everything recommended, but failed to get any benefit, until a gentlemen who was cured of rheumatism by Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil told me about it. I began using it both internally and externally, and before two bottles were used I was radically cured. We find it a household medicine, and for croup, burns, cuts and bruises, it has no equal."

FIRE PROTECTION.

A meeting of the rate payers held on Wednesday the 6th of Aug. to receive the committee's report, and discuss the subject of fire protection. Mr. Isaac Garbutt in the chair, Mr. Wm. M Graham Secy.

The chairman explained that the committee had all the information they could get from different sources and had compared them. From the information obtained they computed that a pipe laid from the junction of Church and Reid sts. to mill race, thence to Rush falls, would cost about $6,500, if there was no rock to excavate; that the water supply should be leased for $60 a year for 21 years. Considerable discussion took place during which the chairman of the committee explained that they were not recommending the scheme, but submitting information only.

It was moved by Mr. R. C. Strickland, seconded by Mr. David Smith, that it is the opinion of this meeting, that a system of water works would suit the requirements of the village as a means of fire protection, better than a hand or steam fire engine, and the adoption of the same would meet the approval of this meeting, provided the property owners in the fire limit by a majority of two thirds, show that they would agree to pay such a proportion of the cost of same as the property owners on the outside of the fire limit would consider just and fair. Carried.

It was moved by Mr. R. C. Strickland, seconded by Mr. W. H. Casement, that the formed committee continue to act and obtain and give any information they can to those who may move farther in the matter. Carried.

A vote of thanks was tendered to the committee for the information given and trouble taken in the matter. The meeting adjourned.

NEARLY ANOTHER ACCIDENT.

On Friday last we nearly had a similar accident to that which occured last winter at the railway crossing between Douro and and Lakefield. Mr. James Charlton drove on to the track, and seeing the train very near jumped down and backed his horse off, the engine passed but the passenger coach touched the horse in passing; the engineer in the meantime had been watching Mr. Charltoe, and when he saw him attempt to cross the track, had promptly reversed his engine and whistled down brakes, or without doubt an accident was inevitable. We notice that this crossing is still left so that an approaching train cannot be seen from the east side of the track till very near.

We hope our council may soon see after the matter before it is too late.

COUNCIL MEETING.

Council met on Monday evening the 11th. Present, councillors McWilliams, Cox, and Moore in the chair.

A communication was received from Mr. Thos. Mitchell, resigning his office of village collector; from the school board asking $1,375 for current expenditure; from Mr. E. Pearce, county clerk, stating that $300 would be the amount required from the municipality for county purposes.

A resolution was passed ordering a check in favor of the village treasurer, to be deposited in the Bank of Montreal, in favor of Superintendent of Indian Department; payment of islands 8 and 32 in Otonobee river, which have now become the property of the village.

A resolution was passed instructing the clerk to write to the County, asking him to tax Mr. Wright with the costs of appeal to the court, his assessment being sustained.

The following accounts were ordered to be paid:

Isaac Watson, Road master	$16.20
Augustus Morey, wages	6.38
Martin Coughlin, gravel	2.80
James Richardson, wages	11.00
W. H. Casement, nails	3.25
Review Printing Co.	8.14
Poussette & Roger	9.00
John Griffin, attending court of appeal	3.00
Dr. Bell, " " "	2.00
	$63.27

A grant of $5.00 charity was given to Mr. O'Neil. The council then ajourned.

APSLEY.

THE POKER'S SOLILOQUY.

A pig having lately been incarcerated in pound here, was heard to utter something like the sentiments given below:

Oh! once I was happy but now I'm forlorn,
I no longer can root 'midst potatoes and corn;
From my brothers and sisters I'm ruthlessly torn.

Ignominiously locked up in a pound;
I get very sad when I think of my fate,
If only Joe Garrow had put up a gate;
But now its no use, I know it's too late.
For I'm safely locked up in the pound;
Oh! when I was free I could harmlessly grunt,
Around the whole village my vituals to hunt;
I get so enraged at my thoughts I could bunt,
My head on the walls of this pound;
My rations are served out to me every day,
For which my proprietors a "york shilling" pay;
But whether he will or not, 'tis hard to say,
While I'm languishing here in the pound.
I heard some one say that I would be sold,
To pay all expenses of being so bold;
For rooting potatoes I'll be turned into gold,
And once more be feed from this pound;
I hope that who buys me will give me good feed,
That again from temptation I will be freed.
And give me sufficient to satisfy greed,
I'll never get back in this pound.

WEATHER NOTES.

July has been a very cold month, the thermometer seldom reaching 80° in the shade, but on several occasions at sun-rise it went below 50°, the lowest of which was on the morning of the 21st and 26th, being 46° and 44° respectively, with white frosts on both mornings, doing some damage. Five times we had thunder during the month, and rain fell on 16 days to the depth of 2 inches and 80-100 of an inch. The severest storm commenced at 11 p. m. of the 22nd, raining till 6 p. m. of the 23rd, namely: 19 hours rain, falling to the depth of 1 inch 2-100 of an in. The average temperature of June was 65°, while that of July is only 58°. The effect of the July cold weather and rain was retarding the ripening of our spring crops, thereby considerably reducing our prospect of an early harvest.

Saturday morning August the 9th, sharp frost, thermometer at sun-rise standing at 40°.

BENSFORT.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Large and numerous parcels are being passed around, which almost means destruction to the ducks.

Camping parties along the river also indicate the same, no less.

The crops and harvesting are so far a success. The former part of the season being rather wet, afforded opportunities for repairing new machinery and testing old ones, and time has since been used to great advantage.

The new Agricultural Hall is completed, and its appearance gives credit both to the builders and the Society.

A Remarkable Escape.

Mrs. Mary A. Dailey, of Tunkhannock, Pa. was afflicted for six years with Asthma and Bronchitis, during which time the best physicians could give no relief. Her life was despaired of, until in last October she procured a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery, when immediate relief was felt, and by continuing its use for a short time she was completely cured, gaining in flesh 50 lbs. in a few months. HAMILTON.

Horse thieves are keeping pretty busy around the neighboring districts. On Sunday morning last one of the gang stole a horse from the premises of Mrs. Thos. Grieves, lot 28, 2 con., Hamilton Township. A set of harness was stolen at the same time belonging to Mr. W. Simpson, who lives on the next lot to Mrs. Grieves.

NORWOOD.

The garden party held at the residence of Mr. P. M. Grover on Friday evening last, under the auspices of the English Church, was a grand success. The magnificent grounds were beautifully illuminated and thronged with people from this and neighboring villages. The refreshments were all that could be desired, while the playing of the Band added greatly to the enjoyment of the occasion. The ladies of the church and the Rev. J. Gibson the latter in particular, who had charge of the affair, are to be congratulated on its successful issue.

OSHAWA.

On Sunday last a number of lads were camping out by the lake at Oshawa, and two of them, named Southcombe and Kennedy, were fooling with a revolver. The weapon by some means was discharged, and the bullet struck Southcombe in the forehead just over the inside corner of the right eye. He was stunned, but was soon able to walk up to Dr G. M. Farwell's office, where the bullet was probed for and extracted from the skull where it was embedded. The bullet was quite flat. The doctor says he never saw a similar case, as the boy is only about ten years old, and was only a few feet away when the shot was fired.

Mr. William Wilson, an old resident of this town, died on Tuesday morning. Deceased was a native of Fermanagh, Ireland, and had resided in Port Hope for over twenty years.

On Monday evening a quarter of a mile foot race, between T. Sharpe and P. Heanegan, for $10 a side, was run in the park. There was quite a number of spectators present, and some money changed hands. Sharpe won rather easily.

From the half-yearly return lately made to the Education Office, it is learned that 119 pupils attended Port Hope High School last half year, and that the daily average attendance for the same period was 108. This is about $29.50 per pupil per annum.

CAMPBELLFORD.

A case of malignant scarlet fever is raging in a house near the railway track on the west side of the river.

Mr. R. Boyle brought to this office last week a potato which would fill a bushel basket if a few more like it were placed therein. It was grown on Mr. B.'s premises, lot 1 in the 7th concession of Seymour, and weighs two pounds.

On Monday, the 11th inst., the largest jam of logs that was ever seen accumulated at Ranney's Falls, about a mile south of Campbellford. The foreman, Mr. D. F. Callaghan, and four men came very near losing their lives while breaking the jam.

News comes from Montreal that a satisfactory settlement has been arrived at between Messrs. D. Morrice & Co., proprietors of the Trent Valley Woollen Mills, Campbellford, and their creditors. Under the arrangement entered into, eighty per cent. of the general indebtedness will be paid off.

BOBCAYGEON.

There is great promise of our Agricultural Show being a brilliant success. It will occupy two days,—Tuesday and Wednesday, the 7th and 8th of October.

On the whole the crops around the village are good. The hay is light, but the grain is all above an average. Barley, oats, and wheat are each excellent. Harvesting is now in full operation, and a considerable quantity of wheat will be housed by Saturday should the weather continue dry.

Our village was never gayer or more attractive than at present. The hotels are nearly full, the private residents have many visitors, and the fishing was never better. The weather is splendid, the steamboats are running with admirable precision, money is abundant, we are informed that the beer is unexceptionable, and every thing is coleur de rose. Of an evening our park has a very pretty appearance, and the lake and river are all day alive with boats. Now is the time to visit Bobcaygeon the Beautiful.

MANVERS.

A BEAR STORY

On last Wednesday evening, Miss Colvin, aged seventeen, daughter of Mr. James Colvin, Sr., of 10th con. Manvers, went out to bring home the cows. At night she did not return and the rest of the family became alarmed for her safety. To get where the cows were she had to go through a portion of the Big Pigeon Creek Swamp, and it was supposed that she had either lost her way, or had been attacked by a bear. The neighbors for three days scoured the country for miles, but no trace of her could be found. The wildest excitement prevailed. All the fortune tellers within a radius of fifty miles were consulted, and it was amusing to hear what they saw in the tea cups and from the cards, &c. Finally, on Sunday, about noon, the long-lost girl walked out of the swamp looking as young and pleasant as ever. Her story is as follows:—When nearing the edge of the swamp, she dog that was with her started to bark at some object in the bushes, and immediately afterwards the girl was confronted, much to her horror, by a large black bear. She endeavored to escape, and ran for a quarter of a mile, the bear still pursuing. Tired and almost frightened to death, she climbed a small tree to escape Bruin, and there remained for some hours, when the pursuer left. She descended and tried to find her way home, in which she was unsuccessful. After wandering about she finally came to the conclusion that she was lost in the woods. She claims to have heard the reports of the guns fired by the searchers, still she could not find her way out of the dense thicket. From Wednesday evening to Sunday noon she claims to have eaten nothing. It is rumored that one young man who was sadly affected at the "bear" story, was considerably revived at the appearance of Miss Colvin.

How Would It Do.

This bad weather requires a remedy. It seems as if the whole responsibility should rest on Veuner and Wigins, for we had some kind of weather before they appeared upon the scene. How would it do to string them up? Would it make things better? Another hint of importance—don't hang on to your corns as weather indicators. Better string them out root and branch. Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor will do it quickly, painlessly and with certainty. Don't buy dangerous flesh eating substances. Get Putnam's, and no other.

CHOLERA

IS COMING!

The countries where Cholera prevails, as in India, China and Africa. Pain-Killer is considered the surest and safest of all known remedies, and the natives place the most perfect reliance in it.

Read the following extract from the letter of a missionary in China:

Dear Sirs:—I ought to have acknowledged long ago the box of Pain-Killer you had the goodness to send me last year. Its coming was most providential. I believe hundreds of lives were saved, under God, by it. The Cholera appeared here soon after we received it. We resorted at once to the Pain-Killer, using as directed for Cholera. A list was kept of all to whom the Pain-Killer was given, and our native assistants assured us that eight out of every ten to whom it was prescribed, recovered.

Believe me, dear sirs, gratefully and faithfully yours.

AYER'S

Cherry Pectoral.

No other complaints are so insidious in their attack as those affecting the throat and lungs: none so trifled with by the majority of sufferers. The ordinary cough or cold, resulting perhaps from a trifling or unconscious exposure, is often but the beginning of a fatal sickness. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has well proven its efficacy in a forty years' fight with throat and lung diseases, and should be taken in all cases without delay.

A Terrible Cough Cured.

"In 1857 I took a severe cold, which affected my lungs. I had a terrible cough, and passed night after night without sleep. The doctors gave me up. I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which relieved my lungs, induced sleep, and afforded me the rest necessary for the recovery of my strength. By the continued use of the Pectoral a permanent cure was effected. I am now 61 years old, hale and hearty, and am satisfied your Cherry Pectoral saved me."
Horace Fairbrother.
Rockingham, Vt., July 15, 1882.

Croup.—A Mother's Tribute.

"While in the country last winter my little boy, three years old, was taken ill with croup. It seemed as if he would die from strangulation. One of the family suggested the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, a bottle of which was always kept in the house. This was tried in small and frequent doses, and to our delight in less than half an hour the little patient was breathing easily. The doctor said that the Cherry Pectoral had saved my darling's life. Can you wonder at our gratitude? Sincerely yours,
Mrs. Emma Gregory."
139 West 128th St., New York, May 16, 1882.

"I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for several years, and do not hesitate to pronounce it the most effectual remedy for coughs and colds we have ever tried.
A. J. Crane."
Lake Crystal, Minn., March 15, 1882.

"I suffered for eight years from Bronchitis, and after trying many remedies with no success, I was cured by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Joseph Walden."
Byhalia, Miss., April 5, 1882.

"I cannot say enough in praise of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, believing as I do that but for its use I should long since have died from lung troubles. E. Braddon."
Palestine, Texas, April 22, 1882.

No case of an affection of the throat or lungs exists which cannot be greatly relieved by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and it will always cure when the disease is not already beyond the control of medicine.

more silks than all the other houses combined. Since they placed on sale the 22 inch Black Silk at 75 cents per yard, which is equal to any offered elsewhere at $1.00, the sales have been immense. Their large and well lighted Silk Department has been thronged with other buyers, all declaring their goods to be the best value ever offered in Peterborough, notwithstanding the exaggerated advertisements of other houses, who cannot buy them as low as the retail price here.

Where these Silks are procured, or why they are sold so cheap is no affair of the customers. It is enough for them to know that they can buy here about 25 per cent less than the prevailing prices throughout the town. Do not fail to ask for our Summer Silks at 40c., 45c., 50c., 60c., and 75c. See our Black Dress Silks at $1.00, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75 $2.00, $2.25, $2.50, warranted pure silk both filling and warp. They are heavy in texture beautiful in finish and quality, surpassing anything in the town at 25 per cent. higher in price. Don't fail to see them at

Giroux & Sullivan's

CHRISTIE'S TELEGRAPHING.

I am very glad that telephones have been invented; and yet I am glad they were not sooner invented. I should like to tell you the reason. That will take some time, for it is quite a story:

We live in the country, at Oakbrook, and my father is the Treasurer and Superintendent of the Oakbrook mills. Our house—a very pleasant country house it is—is situated on a beautifully wooded slope close to the river, and is a quarter of a mile from the mills. That is why a telegraph wire was placed between the two.

I promised father when it was put up that I would learn to send messages over it. There was no one else in the family who could have learned. Both my brothers were at boarding school, and mother would as soon have thought of studying the Chinese language as telegraphy.

Father declared that I never would learn. Girls had but little patience for such things, he said. Nevertheless, the wire was put up and connected with a battery in the library, and in just four months' time I had mastered the alphabet and technicalities of the instrument so that I could use it readily and was able to read the messages by ear.

It was Harry Randall who taught me. He was one of the clerks at the office, and he had learned to use the instrument, because it was necessary to have somebody to send messages by the wire that ran from the mills to the [illegible] City of Palmer.

Having explained so much, I think I have said all that is necessary to enable you to understand what occurred on a certain February night, about which I am going to tell you.

We were through supper, and were sitting together, father, mother and I, around the table in the library, when Joseph, our coachman, and man-of-all work about the place, brought in the mail as usual.

Father eagerly took a letter that seemed to have been expected, from the other letters. I noticed a disturbed expression upon his face as he read it; and I was more anxious than surprised when he arose and went to the hall door and called to the girl who was in the dining-room.

"Mary," said he, "tell Joseph to harness Prince at once. I must get to the Junction in time for the 8 o'clock express. He'll have to finish his supper when he gets back."

Then he turned and said that letter contained intelligence that made it necessary that he should go to New York that night. Of course, as the wife and daughter of a business man, we knew what it meant, and that there was not a word of remonstrance to be said. So mother went to make for him what preparation was needful, and I should have followed her a moment later, but father called me back.

"Christie," he said, rather soberly, "I am going to tell you something that no one knows anything about save Harry Randall. I have quite a large sum of money—over $2,000—in my pocket." He touched his breast with his finger. "I never keep large amounts of money by me, but in this case it was unavoidable, and I thought I should feel less anxious to have it with me than to allow it to remain in the safe at the office. I cannot, of course, take it to New York, so I want you to take charge of it and keep it till to-[illegible] morning, and then carry it to [illegible] for him to deposit in the bank. Don't say anything to your mother about it. She is so timid and nervous that she would not sleep a wink all night if she knew so large a sum was in the house. Do you understand?"

With no slight feeling of responsibility I took the leathern pocket-book which he handed me and placed it in the pocket of my dress.

Father went on: "Perhaps you had better put it under your pillow. Of course it is fire that I am most anxious about. There is no danger of the money in any other way. Not a soul knows it."

Then he went into the hall and came very unexpectedly upon Joseph, for I heard him speak somewhat sharply to him because he had not gone to the stable, and declaring that his business was of more importance than his supper. I heard Joseph mutter something about taking time to finish his meal.

Ten minutes later, as father was going he whispered:

"I've been thinking, Christie, that young Randall had better come and sleep at the house. I shall feel easier about you. He [illegible] to his chores at work as night [illegible] time."

Then he stepped into the buggy, and they drove away into the darkness and rain.

I did not send a message to Harry, however. Indeed, I laughed a little as I thought of father's anxiety. He was almost as timid as mother, after all.

I was of a rather easy, careless disposition, and greatly had not a particle of dread of having the money in my pocket. And as we were sat there in the library for a long while after this, mother dozing in the big chair, and I intent upon some fancy work which I was anxious to finish in time for a friend's birthday, I forgot altogether of the package of money that lay at the bottom of my dress pocket.

Joseph did not get back until after 10 o'clock, although it was only three miles to the junction, and he should have been home long before that hour.

We thought little of that, however. He had been with us several years, and I learned that he had been recently led into bad company, and that father had several times had angry words with him about his habits.

Joseph slept in the house, and for that reason it seemed to me quite unnecessary that Harry Randall should be there also.

When the clock struck 10 mother arose, declaring it was time to go to bed. She went into all the lower rooms to see that the windows and doors were fastened, and then came back to the library for me.

But I did not feel sleepy, and wanted very much to go on with my work, so I begged her to go upstairs without me, promising to come up in the course of an hour.

The clock struck 11 almost before I knew the time had passed. I laid down my work and counted the strokes without looking at the clock itself.

I was sitting at a little center-table, near the lamp. At my left, a little way off against the wall, was father's desk, with books and papers scattered upon it, and the battery at one end.

Opposite me were two long windows that opened upon the side piazza. Over these were thick curtains, closely drawn, which did not shut out the sound of the pelting storm outside. Directly behind me was the hall door, standing, as usual, wide open.

Just then I heard, or fancied I heard, a low sigh or breath in the hall. I felt a little uneasy, and smiled to myself at my nervousness, then took up my work again. I had not finished what I had set myself to do.

I had not taken three stitches when I laid the work down again. There was no use denying it or laughing at myself. For some reason there suddenly came over me a strong feeling of nervousness and dread. It seemed as if I realised as I had not before that evening the fact that I was sitting all alone downstairs in the house, at 11 o'clock at night, with a large sum of money in my pocket.

I glanced at the desk. Possibly Harry was still at work at the office. If he was, a single sentence over the wire would call him.

I was getting up to go to the desk to signal and see if he was at the mill, when something occurred to me that seemed to turn me cold and motionless as stone in an instant.

Behind me, so close that I knew it came from the threshold of the hall door, a low, hoarse voice, that I knew, without seeing the speaker, must be that of a desperate and wicked man, broke the stillness, and bade me "Good evening!"

For a moment, as I say, I felt as though I had been turned to stone. Then the voice, speaking again, seemed at least to restore the life in me, and to set my heart to beating violently.

The language that the man used was not even as good English as, in attempting to reproduce, I find myself writing.

"Don't be frightened, miss. I beg of ye not to be frightened. All ye've got ter do is ter keep still, an' not a hair of yer pretty head shall be harmed."

Then I turned my head, half-wheeling my chair at the same time, and saw standing in the doorway a tall, brutal-looking man, altogether as ugly and ill-conditioned and fearful-looking a person as I ever had seen.

Naturally enough I opened my lips to utter a little cry, but he stopped me by a single threatening motion of a club he carried in his hand.

"S—h," he fiercely hissed. "If ye raise a single scream I'll strike ye as senseless as yer mother is upstairs."

The last word changed for a moment the nature of my fear and gave me strength to speak.

"What have you done to my mother?" I demanded excitedly. "Do you mean—have you killed her?"

He uttered a sort of low laugh.

"No, my dear; she was waking up, so we had ter use chloroform. An' you must keep still or you'll be served the same way. You see, it's just here—"

He drew a step nearer and seemed disposed to explain matters.

"What we want is some money your father brought down from Palmer yisterday. Maybe yer don't know about it; but we do, and we know he left it in the house when he went off to-night. My friend is up stairs lookin' for it this minute. All we want is the money. We don't mean harm to nobody. Ye shan't be touched if ye behave yerself an' keep quiet."

Somewhat assured by this, and having had time while he was speaking to collect myself, I was now able to assume an appearance at least of calmness.

I took up my embroidery and went on working, or pretending to work—at the pattern I was embroidering; I think the action helped me, too, for I presently found myself quite calm, and with a coolness and resolution that I can hardly believe in now, as I recall it, turning over in my mind what I ought to do.

What would these two men do when they found, as they would soon find, that the money was not up stairs? They would be disappointed and desperate—capable, perhaps, of deeds that they had not at first intended.

Perhaps I had better give up the money at once and so get rid of them. And yet, father had confided it to my care; and it did not belong to him but to the company. I ought not give it to these men if I could help it. Oh, why could I not give an alarm in some way? What if I could open my mouth and cry out at any risk? Could I make Joseph hear away out in the wing of the house as he was? Alas, I knew that I could not, even had not this man been sitting there by the door—he had taken a chair now—eyeing me fiercely as though he read my thoughts. Ah, if I had only done as father wished and telegraphed for Harry Randall to come [illegible] not summon [illegible] even now, if perchance he was still at the office?

I arose from my chair, mechanically grasping my work in my hand. My guard got up also, evidently suspicious of my slightest movement.

"I'll have to ask yer to keep quiet, miss," said he, with a harsh, determined voice.

I turned upon him indignantly. "I suppose I may change my seat if I like," said I.

And without waiting for his permission, I walked deliberately over to the desk and sat down on the revolving chair that stood before it. At the same time I threw my work down on the desk in such a way as to cover completely the battery, which instrument my companion had probably not noticed at all. Perhaps he would not have known what it was if he had.

I sat there a moment listlessly twisting the chair back and forth, and trying to make up my mind what best to do.

Just then there was a slight noise on the hall stairs and the man became uneasy, stood up and looked at the library door, as if he was about to go toward it. Then he turned again to me, and with a threatening gesture said:

"You jest sit there while I step into the hall a bit. And if you stir or make a noise it will be the worst for ye. Do you mind that?"

He went softly into the hall.

Feeling that now was my opportunity, I put my finger on the knob, and as silently as possible sent my signal over the wire into the night, down to the mills and Harry Randall.

"Harry are you there?"

In another instant I was leaning back in my chair and moving an ink-stand on the table to make a noise. How my heart was beating, and my ears were strained to catch the sound that—if I might in God's goodness hope it—might possibly come back to me.

Almost a minute—it seemed an age—I listened; and my heart sank as no answering signal was heard. Then—click! click! click! came the sounds, sweeter to my ears than the sweetest music, and I knew Harry was there. These sounds were to some extent covered by the drumming of my thimble, but to me were as plain as spoken words.

"Yes."

Instantly I sent back my answer. Two excited words, run all together.

"Robbers! Help!"

The total silence that followed assured me, after a minute's anxious waiting, that Harry had comprehended my message, and that doubtless he would come at once to the house. Fortune had favored me, for I had heard the man creeping up the hall stairs, and thus I had escaped the results of any suspicions he might have had had he heard the clicking of the instrument.

I did not look at the clock, and so cannot say how long I sat there in silence. It seemed to me that it was hours.

Then there was the sound of whispering in the hall. The next moment there appeared in the doorway a second stranger, rougher and more desperate, if possible, in appearance than the first; and close behind him, to my great surprise and indignation, was our man Joseph. They both advanced into the room, the one looking angry and disappointed, and the other with a sheepish air as he caught my eye.

"We have found the key of the safe," growled the second stranger. "But all for nothing. The money wan't in it, and we have looked high and low, and can't find it. But Joe here sticks to it that it's somewhere in the house; and he thinks," looking fiercely at me, "you know where. It's no use, Miss [illegible]; we havn't got any time to waste and we won't have no nonsense. I see it in your eye; you know where the money is. And you've got to tell."

He had advanced while he had been speaking and was now quite near. I arose from my chair, fearing he meant to lay hands on me. And at that instant—my ears painfully alert to any noise—I was certain I caught the sound of a footfall outside of the window, and I gained fresh courage.

"And why have I got to tell?" I demanded, purposely raising my voice so it could be heard outside the house. "What right have you to break into this house this way—"

The man suddenly caught me by the wrist, uttering at the same time a fearful oath.

"You make another sound above a whisper," he cried, in a voice hoarse with rage, "and I'll—"

He did not finish his sentence. There came a loud crash at both windows at once, and the next instant Harry Randall with two watchmen from the mills burst into the room.

The rescue was complete, so far as saving our lives was concerned. The robbers attempted no resistance.

In an instant before a word could be said or a blow struck, the man raised his hand and dashed the lamp from the table. In the darkness and confusion the burglars, Joseph among them, made their escape. And although every effort was made, both then and after, to secure their arrest, they never were taken.

However, as I said, our lives and the money that had been confided to my keeping were safe; and we were all thankful for that.

And I may as well say again that I am very glad that, at that time at least, the telegraph had not been superseded by the telephone.—Somerville Journal.

Similarity of Names.

One of the odd things in a great city is the number of people who have similar names, from which amusing and often annoying experiences are apt to result. To say nothing of John Smith, when one John Brown or Wm. Robinson gets married, dozen of other John Browns or Wm. Robinsons receive letters of congratulation, and if one of the name applies for a divorce, all the social circles of all the others wonder if the applicant is the man they know. This is the time the wives of such gentlemen receive numerous calls from their friends, all of whom think, of course, it could not possibly be their acquaintance, but that they will feel more comfortable if they go and see about it. It may even happen that a very prominent citizen who never took a pin from any one, or could bring himself to kill a fly, takes up his morning newspaper, and reads his own name as one associated with burglary or suspected murder, and it may be assumed that that paragraph would make him feel decidedly uncomfortable. Then it is he realizes what is in a name, and thinks he would prefer the perfume of the felony to be attached to some other than his own.

A MARVELOUS STORY

THERE IN TWO LETTERS.

FROM THE SON: "20 Cedar St., New York, Oct. 21, 1883.

"Gentlemen: My father resides at Glover, Vt. He has been a great sufferer from disease, and the enclosed letter will tell you what a marvelous effect has had in his case. I think his blood must have contained the humor for at least ten years; but it did not show, except in the form of a comedone sore on the wrist, until about five years ago. From a few spots which appeared at that time, it gradually spread so as to cover his entire body. I assure you he was terribly afflicted, and an object of pity, when he began using your medicine. Now, there are few men of his age who enjoy as good health as he has. I could easily name fifty persons who would testify to the facts in his case.

Yours truly, W. H. PHILLIPS."

FROM THE FATHER: "It is both a pleasure and a duty for me to state to you the benefit I have derived from the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Six months ago I was completely covered with a terrible humor and scrofulous sores. The humor caused an incessant and indescribable itching, and the skin cracked so as to cause the blood to flow in many places whenever I moved. My sufferings were great, and my life a burden. I commenced the use of the SARSAPARILLA in April last, and have used it regularly since that time. My condition began to improve at once. The sores have all healed, and I feel perfectly well in every respect—being now able to do a good day's work, although 75 years of age. Many inquire what has wrought such a cure in my case, and I tell them, as I have been tried to tell you, AYER'S SARSAPARILLA. Glover, Vt., Oct. 21, 1883. Yours gratefully, HIRAM PHILLIPS."

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA cures Scrofula and all Scrofulous Complaints, Erysipelas, Eczema, Ringworm, Blotches, Sores, Boils, Tumors, and Eruptions of the Skin. It clears the blood of all impurities, aids digestion, stimulates the action of the bowels, and thus restores vitality and strengthens the whole system.

PETERBOROUGH, AUGUST 21, 1884.

The Victory Confirmed.

The hopes of Sir John Macdonald and the other enemies of Ontario, who thought that even after the foreshadowed decision of the Privy Council on the Boundary matter, it would be still in the power of the Dominion Government to annoy Ontario, have been utterly crushed by the formal decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council rendered on Saturday last. The Committee of the Privy Council has decided that the boundaries of Ontario are practically those set forth in the Award, and Her Majesty in Council has graciously issued an order approving the Award and commanding obedience to it. Thus the matter is settled, and Ontario's and Mr. Mowat's triumph is great. The Privy Council saw that, unless some such course were taken, the matter would be still as far from settlement as ever. They thought that if Sir John was dishonorable enough to repudiate the award, he would not, if the matter were referred back to Canada, unsettled definitely, have any hesitation in ignoring the decision of the Privy Council itself. He would keep the matter open as long as possible, and make as much political capital out of it as he could. But his measure as a politician was taken, and the matter has been authoritatively settled beyond controversy, and now, "not one stick of timber, etc.," will Sir John have the pleasure of dividing among his sharky followers, and he will have to answer to the uttermost for every stick of timber which he has unjustly and unwarrantably bestowed on his political friends. Hon. Mr. Mowat has been the firm friend of Ontario all through this troublesome matter, and, on September 16th there will be, in his honor, such a demonstration in Toronto as will show some of the degenerate politicians of this country that the people can appreciate honor, honesty and capability in their public men.

A Good Showing.

The Conservatives, both press and politicians, have vainly tried to make a point against the Ontario Government in the matter of Railway annuities. To show how brilliant some of these wiseacres be, it may be explained that, accruing from the railway legislation of past years there is outstanding scrip coming due every half year from the present to December 31st, 1902. To provide for the payment of these maturing liabilities an annuity scheme was brought down at the late session by which, at the end of fifty-eight years, the whole debt will have been paid and the Province will have been a gainer to the extent of one million, two hundred and fifty-three thousand, one hundred and eighty-eight dollars. The annuities were issued (in preference to using the surplus of the Province) at 4½ per cent. The surplus of the Province is invested at from 6 to 5 per cent, and, therefore, a gain of from 1½ to ½ per cent is made by the issue of these annuities. The simple fact is that the surplus is left invested at 5 and 6 per cent., and money is borrowed at 4½ per cent. to meet maturing obligations. The "financial Colossus" of West Peterborough tries, and has tried, in his brilliant way, to prove that the annuity scheme involves an immense addition to the Provincial debt. The Globe takes the hon. gentleman's size so exactly, and exposes the ridiculousness of his dishonest contention so fully, that we give our city contemporary's paragraph relating to the matter:

"Mr. Carnegie, the coming great man of the local Opposition who has not come yet, and gives no very distinct intimation of ever being likely to put in an appearance, fancied some time ago that he made a clever objection when he said that the scheme was one which created a debt of $6,000,000 in order to pay off an indebtedness of $2,800,000. How did he make that out? By taking all the interest paid in the course of these forty years and reckoning it borrowed money or debt. Mr. Carnegie has yet to learn what is the meaning of the word 'interest,' or even what may be the article itself. The interest on this money borrowed will all be met by that accruing from the other money left invested at a higher rate, and the surplus of course goes into the Provincial treasury. Yet this wise man says it was so much added to the Provincial liabilities! On this very novel principle, when Sir Leonard Tilley borrows £5,000,000 or $24,300,000 for 25 years he has before the loan has matured increased the debt of the Dominion by $45,562,000, because during these years he has paid in interest $21,262,000! This is palpable nonsense, and even Mr. Carnegie ought to see that it is. But it is not so much so as that gentleman was guilty of when he talked about the Provincial obligation being increased by $6,000,000 in order to pay off less than half of that sum. Instead of any of that interest being paid by the Province, it will, as we have said, be met by the interest from the money lying at 5 and 6 per cent., which, but for this annuity arrangement, would have been paid away at a loss to Ontario, compared with what will result from this much-abused annuity arrangement, of, as we have said, $1,262,188.93."

How happy would have been the Province if the immense financial ability of the member for West Peterborough had been placed at the service of the Government! What a glorious Finance Minister he would make if he would only apply administratively the same principles which he has applied to the management of certain local financial undertakings!

Peterborough's Prosperity.

By an oversight in "making up," the following paragraph was omitted from the editorial article, entitled "Peterborough's Prosperity," published in our last issue. The reader will kindly consider it the concluding part of that article.

The amalgamation of the thriving village of Ashburnham with Peterborough, is another subject of interest to us all; this is we believe its natural destiny. Our interests and theirs are alike, just as Yorkville which was so long opposed to annexation with Toronto, has aroused herself at last to seek and secure union with the city; so, the stern logic of facts, and the march of time will surely bring the Ashburnhamites to see the benefits of one corporation where now two exists. There is a sentimental idea that across the river in that direction isfar off. The fact is the village possesses some of the best building sites and more conviniently and centrally situated than anywhere in Peterborough. If we wish to rise shortly to the dignity of a city, steps should be taken to secure this union. Increased taxation we know, is feared by some of our suburban friends; but the corresponding advantages are so great that this should not prove a deterrent. We believe Ashburnham as a ward of the city of Peterborough, would add more to its wealth and population in one year, than it now does in three. Might it not be well to test this question of amalgamation by a popular note? There are many other questions of interest likely to conduce to Peterborough's future prosperity, that we cannot touch just now. Our readers may consider this sufficient "to read, mark, and inwardly digest," for one week. In future we may return to our subject with the hope that these separate points will receive in the meantime, the deepest attention from all our citizens, and may result in some practical good.

Remember Dr. Carman in the Methodist Church, Ashburnham, next Sabbath.

Barnum, the great showman, is a sad man. After devoting the whole of his life to the study of devices for humbugging the public he has now to confess that he has been a failure, and the politicians have got the start of him. He has discovered that as successful humbuggers, the "National Policy" politicians, can give him points and beat him. Therefore, he has turned Protectionist, and supports Blaine. Imitation is the sincerest praise.

The Chatham Banner, in noticing the Tory argument that sugar is no dearer, but is on the contrary cheaper, on account of the tariff, gives the following list of prices at Detroit and Chatham:

	Detroit lbs. for $1	Chatham lbs. for $1
Extra C sugar	18	19½
Standard granulated	14½	11
Cut loaf	12½	8

In England, where no tax exists upon sugar, loaf sugar is advertised at 5c. per lb. Our readers will be able to judge from these figures how much of the money they pay is bounty, and how much represents the real value of the sugar which they purchase.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS.

How Canada's Commerce has Shrunk During the Past Year.

ANOTHER ADVERSE BALANCE OF TRADE.

Further Exposure of Sir Leonard's Failure as a Prophet.

(From the Globe.)

OTTAWA, Aug. 13.—Ministerial organs as a rule do not argue the "balance of trade" question now, though they made such a furore over it when in Opposition, and from their point of view they are wise. The trade returns for the fiscal year just ended show that the Finance Minister has made no progress towards establishing the promised equilibrium between exports and imports. In that respect, as in every other, his policy has been a lamentable failure. After five years of high taxation the people of Canada find that their exports have fallen off, and their general commerce has fallen to a figure many millions below what it was ten years ago, while the balance of trade against Canada is larger than in 1877 or 1878.

A COMPARATIVE STATEMENT.

Unrevised returns received by the Customs Department show that the total value of goods imported into Canada in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, was $118,266,630, while the total value of merchandise exported from Canada during the same period was $91,400,000—balance of trade against Canada on the year's operations, $26,986,630. And of the exports only $77,000,000 were the produce of Canada, so that the real balance against the country for last year was over $40,000,000. About $6,000,000 of the exports of last year were made up of American grain passing through to the ocean. This traffic was not counted in the years preceding 1879, so that, deducting this amount, the total exports are found far below what they were ten years ago. Compared with 1883, the return stands thus:—

	1883-84	1882-83
Total imports	$118,949,117	$129,264,622
Total exports	91,402,000	99,695,304
Grand aggregate	$209,643,117	$228,959,926
Produce of Canada (exported)	77,823,236	89,334,671
Excess of imports over exports of Canadian produce	40,519,939	43,919,981
Entered for consumption	106,324,613	125,127,919
Duty collected	20,109,361	23,172,308
Value of dutiable goods entered	82,965,104	91,868,220

The returns for the year just ended are approximately correct. The average duty collected on dutiable goods entered in 1883-84 was a fraction under twenty-five per cent. Though the imports last year were over a million less than in 1875, the custom taxes levied and collected were five millions more than in that year. In 1874 the imports were one hundred and twenty-seven millions and a half, and the duty $14,421,882. The Customs revenue last year was three millions less than in 1882-83, and over a million and a half less than in 1881-82. The excess of imports over exports last year was $26,986,630, against $13,758,120 in 1878, and $12,243,911 in 1876. This is how the high tariff has wiped out that cause of all our commercial woes, the "adverse balance of trade." The value of goods entered for consumption in 1878 was $91,199,577, against $106,534,513. The total value of imports in 1878 was $93,081,787, against $118,243,117 last year. This shows how high taxation has kept the home market for Canadian producers. In 1879-80 when the exports showed a slight excess over imports the Government organs set up a howl of triumph. It is fair therefore to assume that they regarded reduced imports and increased exports as the prime purpose of their tariff. If it failed to produce these results it was a failure. Therefore judged by the measure of its authors high taxation has failed lamentably. All the Globe's readers are familiar with the words of Sir Leonard Tilley, when, in delivering his budget speech, he declared that the large imposts were the cause of commercial depression, and promised to reduce them. He has not kept his pledge. Subsequent experience has shown that the Tory Solomon did not know what he was talking about. He has been as badly worsted on finance as his leader has been on constitutional law.

TORIES CATCHING AT STRAWS.

As lately as January last, when the returns for the half-year showed a slight trade balance in Canada's favour, the Tories again began to put on their war paint, and claim that their policy was about to realize the promises of its authors. Sir John Macdonald's chief organ then said:—

"The value of the exports during the first five months of the present fiscal year is $54,174,616; the value of goods entered for consumption in the same period is $50,856,469. During the corresponding period of 1882, the value of goods entered for consumption was $56,218,346. Notwithstanding that our harvest this year was a poor one, the exports of the country for the five months were $4,118,147 more than the imports of the five months of 1882. It would seem from this that we are gradually coming within measurable distance of that happy state of things when the balance of trade will always be in our favour." The organ was warned at that time that it was putting its foot in it. It did not seem to know that the first five months of the fiscal year are the great exporting months, and now finds that the balance of trade is over twenty-six millions against us. Nevertheless it was over the returns for the five months that Sir Leonard Tilley cackled so loudly, but to no purpose, during the West Middlesex campaign. Will he now kindly state how near we are to the aforesaid "happy state of thing," when the excess of imports over exports in the fiscal year lately ended, is larger in proportion to the aggregate volume of trade than in any year since 1875. True the excess is smaller than it was in 1882-83, but there has been more than corresponding decline, both in imports and exports.

The best way to repair strength and increase the bodily substance is to invigorate the stomach and improve the circulation with Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyspeptic Cure. Simultaneous with the disappearance of indigestion it relieves that morbid despondency, and the nervousness which are as much the product of dyspepsia as the weakness of the stomach and loss of vigor and flesh which proceed from it; as a blood purifier it has no equal.

LACROSSE MATCH.

The Home Team Makes it Hot for Their Volcanic Visitors.

Three in a Row—The Ætnas Beaten in Three Straight Games—The Home Boys Win Really by Fine Playing.

The lacrosse match between the Ætnas of Toronto, who came down with the Sons of Scotland excursion on Monday, and the Peterborough club, proved an easy victory for our boys. There was a large crowd on the field. The City Band made music, and the weather was as hot as the tropics. At three o'clock the teams faced each other as follows:—

PETERBOROUGHS.		ÆTNAS.
G. Giroux	Goal	C. Elliott
P. Myles	Point	J. S. Thompson
J. Henderson	Cover Point	Ross Eckhardt
M. Tierney	Defence field	E. Gordon
J. Howden	do	G. Hudson
R. H. Fortye	do	W. Norman
J.J. Sheehy	Centre field	C. Thompson
A. Yelland	Attack Field	Ed. Brenner
W. J. Scott	do	W. McFarlane
R. S. Kelly	do	A.H. Taylor
C. Rutherford	2nd Home	G. Fleming
M. Halpin	1st Home	G. Rook
J. Coughlin	Field Captain	W. Fleming
A. Elliott	Umpire	H. Bennett

Mr. W. H. Mooney, Ingersoll, Referee.

THE FIRST GAME.

was a surprise party to the Ætnas. Sheehy of course got the ball on the face, and passing it to Scott the latter put it to Henderson. He being closely checked, tipped it over to himself and although he was closely followed he showed some fine play, and getting in front of the flags sent the rubber through, scoring first game in ten seconds from the face.

Play was at once resumed for the SECOND GAME,

Sheehy again won on the draw, and being pursued, passed the ball to Fortye, who was also so closely checked that he could not get a throw; he made a neat run up the side field, distancing his check, and getting a fine throw which sent the sphere right down to the enemy's flags, and only their good defence saved their bacon. From this time out the general feature of the game was the almost continuous jeopardy in which the Ætnas' flags were placed. But there was an excellent defence, and the danger was from time to time staved off. The home twelve never made a finer showing, their team play was excellent, while almost every member of the team distinguished himself by fine feats of individual play. Yelland particularly distinguished himself—being apparently everywhere on the field and doing excellent work. The ball often worked up towards the Peterborough goal but not more than once could it be said to be in danger; the rubber soon found its way to the other side of the field. During this game Kelly got a bad blow across the face, which laid him out for several minutes. After ten minutes he took his place and play was resumed. The Ætnas flags were again in trouble, and before long Sheehy got the ball and dropping it in front of the flags, Scott secured and put it through. Time 27 minutes.

THE THIRD GAME

was a very brief one. After two minutes' play Sheehy got the ball and sent it close to the enemy's goal. Rutherford captured it and by some clever playing worked himself into a position for which he sent it where it was wanted.

Throughout this match the home team though weakened by the absence of Joyal and Rudkins, never showed to better advantage. Their team play was first-class, and if they turn up in such excellent form to-day (Thursday), the Orillias will have some hot work cut out for them.

Lacrosse.

Remember the Lacrosse match this Thursday afternoon between the Peterboroughs and Orillias for the Central District medal.

The second heat of the Idyl Wild and Brewery cup competition will take place at the Tournament to be held on Aug. 26th. The Norwoods have entered against our second twelve, and the first dozen that day face a Toronto team.

In the match between the juniors and seniors of the local club on Monday evening the firsts had all they wanted to do. The firsts had better took to their laurels.

The match game for the Sanderson cup for competition was played on Monday morning between the Cretes and Independents, and was won by the Independents in three straight games. Allen, Begley and Kelly doing the finishing work in the respective games. Following are the teams:

INDEPENDENTS.		CRETES.
J. Phelan	Goal	K. Kincaid
J. McDonald	Point	R. Parnel
C. Robinson	Cover Point	F. Metherall
T. Mehar	Defence Field	J. Connel

The Independents assert that now they have the cup they mean to keep it, which they seem to be able to do.

SMITH'S MARKET.

A SPLENDID ESTABLISHMENT.

On Saturday last Mr. C. B. Smith, of "Smith's Market," the synonym of all luxuries in fruit, fish and the tidbits of a provision trade de luxe, occupied his fine new premises. The new shop is situated two doors north of his old and well known premises, George St., is 22x70 feet in area, with lofty ceilings and is equipped and furnished in a thoroughly first-class manner. The walls have been papered in warm patterns and all the wood work has been elegantly repainted, both done by Mr. J. N. Watson. New nickel plated show cases adorn the shop, and all other equipments of the kind are of first-class style.

In a business of this kind the refrigerator is the most important feature. Mr. Smith's new one is the best of the kind in the Dominion. It is 8x20 feet in area, ten feet in height and has an ice capacity of nine tons. It is enclosed with oiled ash and has separate compartments for different kinds of goods. This complete cooler combines all the latest scientific principles necessary to secure coolness, cleanliness and ventilation. The opening for the ice is in the rear, and the ice is raised by an elevator. It is lighted front and sides by three 3x5 ft glass plates and was built by Mr. John Irwin, who has made both a specialty of and reputation for this kind of work.

Complete cleanliness is secured by the presence of city water, and the electric light illuminates the premises at night.

The stock consists of fruits of every kind, foreign and domestic, confectionary, the more choice and fancy lines of provisions, in fine every article of luxury required on the table, or kept in any similar establishment in any city. Telephonic connection admits of receiving in this way, orders which will be filled promptly. Not only are all kinds of goods sold at Smith's Market, but persons having anything choice in the way of game or fruit will find ready sale and good prices.

As it exists in its enlarged and improved state "Smith's Market" is not equalled, not to say surpassed, either in point of size, convenience, completeness of equipment or extent, variety and freshness of stock, in the Dominion, and it is a credit both to the enterprising proprietor and the town.

I do this to show the confidence I have in the treatment, and to convince the medical profession and others who are still sceptical (notwithstanding the thousands of people who have been cured by it, that the Spirometer I have invented and the medicines and treatment prescribed by the surgeons of the International Throat and Lung Institute are curing and will cure a larger percentage of these diseases than any other treatment in the world.

FIRE.

A serious fire occurred on Saturday morning last, in the bakery of Covert & Weese adjoining the dry goods store of Mr. W. H. Stephenson, to whom the building belonged. The fire, it appears, had been smouldering during the night, and was only discovered about five o'clock on the opening of the store, when the flame and smoke, on getting draught, burst forth with great fierceness. Fortunately the morning was calm, and with the steady devotion of many willing hands, the fire was prevented from spreading to any great extent. The building was only partially injured, the inside of the shop and bakery of Covert & Weese, as well as their stock-in-trade being considerably damaged. The firm of Phillips & Co., tinsmiths, in the same building, also suffered considerably by their goods being damaged by water and removal. The partition wall between the burning building and Mr. Stephenson's being of stone, he suffered no loss. Fortunately all losers by the fire are fully covered by insurance. Too much praise cannot be rendered to a number of citizens who worked so zealously on [illegible] this occasion, and special praise is due Mr. E. V. Gould, for his untiring efforts in furnishing with his team an unexhausting supply of water, which no doubt mainly aided in preventing a serious conflagration.

THE SAVED ARMY.

At last Norwood has been attacked by a detachment of the Saved Army, which has been received with favor and enthusiasm. On Thursday night last, the first shot was fired by a captain or general, ably assisted by some "subs," all of whom made a good impression, but not quite sufficient to arouse much demonstration from the Norwoodites. However, hostilities were only continued for that evening, the officers leaving with the announcement that they intended to continue active operations at this place at a future time.

SUNSTROKE.

On Monday last, Mr. Wm. Cook, of this place, while at work, was suddenly struck down by the oppressive heat of the sun, and remained unconscious for a long time after receiving the stroke. Dr. Pettigrew was immediately summoned, and by his skill and assiduous attention succeeded in bringing him to consciousness and out of danger.

A LIVE BUSINESS MAN.

We notice some of your enterprising business men are pushing their goods down this way to a considerable extent, and none more so than your popular furniture dealer, Mr. D. Belleghem, who recently has filled to perfection several large orders in Norwood, and only a few days ago passed through our village on his way to Blairton, with a large and beautiful supply of all kinds of furniture for the Methodist parsonage of that village. If every section of the county gives Mr. Belleghem the same amount of patronage, it must tax the capacity of his warerooms, so large and so well filled as they always are, to supply the demand for furniture.

Hard to Believe.

It is hard to believe that a man was cured of a kidney disease after his body was swollen as big as a barrel and he had been given up as incurable and lay at death's door. Yet such a cure was accomplished by Kidney-Wort in the person of M. M. Deveraux of Ionia, Mich., who says: "After thirteen of the best doctors in Detroit had given me up, I was cured by Kidney-Wort. I want every one to know what a boon it is.

MIDLAND CROP REPORTS.

The Glowing Accounts Received From Agents of the Road.

The Bay of Quinte Barley.

The reports of the state of the crops on the line of the Midland division Grand Trunk Railway, have been received by Mr. A. White, District Traffic Manager, and are very favourable. The general opinion is that the crops of this year are fully equal to any raised during the past twenty years, and exceed those of 1882. Taking the Division by districts from Toronto to Portage Mead, which embraces some of the best farming sections in Ontario, the reports are as follows:—Fall wheat an excellent crop, averaging 20 to 22 bushels to the acre, now nearly all secured in good condition. Spring wheat, an excellent crop from present appearance. Barley, very good, very plump, and generally secured with but little discolouration. A good crop of peas is anticipated, and the prospects for oats are good. Hay is somewhat light, but roots are looking well. North of Portage Road to Coboconk, crops are much better than usual, but the amount of land under cultivation does not provide much more than is required for local purposes.

WHITBY AND LINDSAY DIVISION.

Crops throughout this district are reported as excellent, especially fall wheat. Barley, a much larger crop than usual, with larger acreage under cultivation, the whole of which is now being secured in good condition.

LINDSAY AND HALIBURTON DIVISION.

The same remarks as above apply to this district as far as Retties, after which, to the northern terminal, Haliburton, the land is to a great extent uncultivated beyond local requirements.

MIDLAND DIVISION.

From Port Hope to Orillia, inclusive, the line runs through an excellent farming community. The reports of the crops are exceedingly favourable. Fall wheat is now nearly all secured, with an anticipated average of from 16 to 20 bushels per acre. Berry good and full. Barley remarkably good, secured in most cases with a plump berry and good colour. Spring wheat gives first-rate indications of a full crop. Oats and peas reported above the average. Hay somewhat light; good indications for root crop. North of Orillia the amount of land under cultivation does not greatly exceed the requirements of local consumers, but the harvest is spoken of as being above the average.

GRAND JUNCTION DIVISION.

This division embraces the celebrated Bay of Quinte barley, and the reports all indicate an abundant crop, the greater part of which has been harvested in first-rate order and with good results. Generally speaking, throughout the Midland division the straw is somewhat light, but all the grain is well headed and the quality and quantity above the average. Hay somewhat below the average. Root crops looking well. Fruit a partial failure.

A really well made corset warranted to give satisfaction, only fifty cents at Turnbull's.

PETERBOROUGH CHEESE BOARD.

The regular fortnightly meeting of the Peterborough Cheese Board was held in the Board rooms on Tuesday. There were fourteen factories represented, and the amount of cheese offered represented not only an unsold balance of the last half of July, but the makes of August, September and October. The following list gives the amounts offered for contract for the respective months for the several factories, Peterborough county alone having been represented. All of the cheese was colored:—

	July.	Aug.	Sept.	Oct.
Keene		240	320	300
Warminster		200	240	150
Lakehurst		60	50	50
Selwyn	100	160	170	160
Normanhurst	60	100	80	80
Myrtle		200	175	160
Trewerne	200	200	200	200
Lily Lake		100	100	80
South Dummer		240	200	200
South Douro	55	120	125	90
Lakefield		200	175	150
Otonabee Union	45	100	80	50
Cherry Grove	60	100	100	80
Glenthorne	60
	525	2,490	2,125	1,660

RECAPITULATION.

July	525
August	2,490
September	2,125
October	1,660

Mr. Wm. Clarton, town, and Mr. Flavelle, Lindsay, were the only buyers present. The former offered 9½ for July, 525 boxes, but with no takers. He also offered 10½, 11½ and 11½ for August, September and October, respectively, to four factories, namely, Warminster, Myrtle, Trewerne and Lily Lake, but these factories declined to close at these figures. Mr. Flavelle offered exactly similar figures for Keene, Selwyn, Normanhurst and South Dummer, but this bid was also declined. No bids were made for the other factories.

When these offers were declined, Mr. Clarton, addressing the sellers, hoped that with such an offer, sellers would not part with their cheese to any other buyers before the next meeting of the Board. This would not be fair to buyers who had taken enough interest to be present and make what he considered a good offer.

Mr. Drummond, President of of the Board, agreed with Mr. Clarton that the offers were good ones, and sellers must hold their cheese subject to these offers if they expected to keep this fair up. A breach of faith would destroy its usefulness. It had been a great benefit to makers in the past, and there must be square dealing to keep up its usefulness.

Several sellers spoke to the same effect, and a resolution was unanimously adopted, pledging sellers to hold their cheese till the next market, to be held on the 26th August, and then offer it for sale.

LINDSAY CHEESE FAIR.

It will be noticed that none of the Victoria factories were represented at the Peterborough fair. The reason is that they held on the 12th a little cheese fair of their own, at which seven factories were represented, with 2,600 boxes, which were purchased by Mr. Flavelle at 10, 10½, 11½ and 11½ for the four months respectively, beginning with July.

NORTH MONAGHAN.

THE LATE WILLIAM DOBBIN.

On Saturday last, August 16th, 1884, Mr. William Dobbin, eldest son of Mr. John Dobbin of North Monaghan, died from consumption. The deceased was about 35 years of age, and was the eldest member of the family, and his is the first death that has occurred therein, since the roof-tree was first reared. William Dobbin was born, married and died in the old homestead. Six months ago he was married, and shortly after the seeds of consumption began to develop. Every human agency was employed to improve his health, and indeed a trip he took to the West, resulted in a temporary improvement, but about three weeks ago he took to his bed from which he never rose again. Deceased was for some time a valued member of the township council, superintendent of the Methodist Sunday School, and an active participant in church work. Deceased will be greatly missed, not only in the family circle of which he was the eldest born, but also in the church and in the councils of his native township. The funeral which took place on Sunday, consisted of a very large procession, which followed the remains to Little Lake Cemetery.

The motto of the proprietors of Dr. Henry Baxter's Mandrake Bitters is, "the greatest good to the greatest number," and so sell a large bottle of a valuable remedy for the small price of 25 cents, and warrant every bottle to give satisfaction or money refunded. 33-4t

THE BARD OF SMITH TO BRITHER SCOTS.

During the welcome by the local St. Andrews Society to the Toronto Sons of Scotland on Monday, Mr. Charles Cameron delivered an address of welcome, and Mr. Telford the bard of the Society read the following poem:

Welcome to the Sons of Scotland, from Toronto, on their Excursion to the Town of Peterborough.

Sons of Auld Scotia, young an' auld,
Come welcome, to our hearts' in bield;
Gloome frae the Shot that wod look canld
At you, brave Sons of Scotia.

You wedded Scots may come yoursel,
But bring your wife and bairns as well;
Unbeutified callants, bring your bolls,
And blak her as in Scotia.

There may be half, their com't be mair,
First breath they drew was pure Scotch air;
Capadian Scots alike mean share
Joys wi' auld Sons of Scotia.

Bring Donald in Hielend costume bricht,
Kilty pipes beneath his oxter tight;
Sma Peterborough lasies clean gryt
Wi' the skirlin notes o'Scotia.

Make drone and chanter squeal and ring,
Strike Tulloch Gorum—up they spring;
They heel and toe, the Highland fling;
The bravest dance o'Scotia.

Bring na braidsword—nor warlike spear,
Nae blindy Gauvelmens in here;
Enjoy this day, that freedom dear;
Forefathers gained in Scotia.

We canna set you doun this day
On heather'd hill or gerse'd brae,
Where some of you in youth did play,
When little bairns in Scotia.

Though far fra there love wields its dart,
And mak us see the Scotchman's part,
Wi' brither hand an' Scottish heart,
We meet you, Sons of Scotia.

This day recalls scenes long past by,
Enjoyed in youth by you and I,
O, spurn that shoot that would deny
He was a son of Scotia.

He has no richt to shew his face
Among the rale true Scottish race,
Some barren isle the fittest place
For ane ashamed of Scotia.

Such lots o' oatmeal it would take
To gie each one a farel o' cake,
Perhaps some auld Scot's teeth would shake
To crack the cakes o' Scotia.

There's nane wants paritch, I suppose,
Nor bicker o' guid Scotch kail brose,
It's fer ower hot for stic a dose
This day to Sons of Scotia.

O, pardon me! that's but a joke,
Baskets well-filled wi' better stock,
They like guid staff like ither folk
Tho' they be sons of Scotia.

You acted selfish—here it lay,
Your advertisement for to-day—
Why! not one single word you say
About daughters of Auld Scotia.

In song still hear them in your mind,
The lass, the wife, the mither kind,
Ah! but for them—where would you find
This day—one son of Scotia.

Sons of Scotland! days like this
Recall the past, renew our bliss,
Convincing us there's naught amiss
In being a son of Scotia.

And why? because her honored name
Has proved the pathway up to fame;
To-day how many heroes claim
To be sons of Scotia!

Auld Scotia, thou art not forgot,
Sic visits binds lik brither Scot;
There micht be mair to tie love's knot.
Mair ticht twixt sons of Scotia.

Come welcome! sound your pibroch clear,
Toronto Sons of Scotland dear
I pledge my word you will find here
Some true, loyal sons of Scotia.

Whenever the thought comes in your crown
Of another visit to this town,
Send word to this puir country down,
He will meet you, Sons of Scotia.

The Guillotine.

The first cart contains the bois de justice, the apparatus of death; the other, a rough receptacle which comes empty but will go away full. The red timbers of the guillotine are raised some fifteen paces in front of the prison gate—raised almost noiselessly, no hammers being used, but every part being screwed into its place. By the light of lanterns the knife of the guillotine is fixed into the grooves, and the executioner makes his experiment to ascertain that it runs smoothly. By-and-by the spectators increase. The riffraff are there, the amateurs of the sensational, some journalists, and—shame to relate—a party of youthful dandies with the berouged accomplices in their debauches. Order is kept by the police, but later march up the municipal guards and trot up the splendid gendarmes of the Seine, massive troopers in bearskins, like the Scots Greys, and they form an inclosure round the machine of reprisal.

The executioner on this occasion was Hendreich. He did not prepare himself for this work on best [illegible] hearhound; his peculiarity was to make a meal of rusks and new milk before approaching his dreadful task. The peculiarity of his successor, Roch, was to supervise the proceedings without removing his tall, shiny silk hat. M. de Paris, as he is called, has higher emoluments than his English colleagues. He receives 9,000f. a year from the state for expenses and 4,000f. for salary.

As the dawn approaches and the gas over the jail gate waxes yellow in the advance shafts of day, the chaplain drives up in a cab and enters, and such sinister adjuncts of the function as buckets of water, bran, and the zinc bath-like case to receive the head becomes visible. Hendreich enters after the chaplain. The hour is at hand. The gates fly open, and the procession appears. The felon, with hair cropped and naked to below the neck, still in the strait waistcoat, hobbles along; at the foot of the ascent to the guillotine the chaplain kisses him on the left cheek. Hendreich supports him under the right armpit, an assistant under the left, another presses from behind. A fourth stands by an upright plank which rises to the level of the felon's breastbone. As he reaches it he is pushed and falls on his stomach to the plank, which is shot rapidly forward until his neck falls into a semicircle hollow under the knife; the upper part which completes the circle is dropped. Hendreich touches a lever, the blade flashes downward, the head jumps into the zinc case, the body is turned over into the tumbril, the head being shaken from its couch of blood-dabbled brain alongside it.

All is over. There is no senseless formality of inquest. The severed remains are galloped off to the Turnip Field, there to be buried, the head between the legs, beside the paupers from the hospitals and the unclaimed unfortunates from the morgue.

A man who advertised a horse for sale last week noted down the objections of all who called to look at the animal, and some of them are here: "Too large." "Too small." "Too old." "Not old enough." "Too lively." "Rather too sleepy." "Object to the white hind feet." "Would take her if she had more white feet." "Don't like her color." "Color just right, but she is too fat." "Weighs too much." "Don't weigh enough." "Has a bad eye." "Eyes all right, but ears too small." "Yes, handsome ears, but the nose spoils her." "Legs all stocked up." "Legs all right, but feet bad." If Shakespeare had said no man knew what he wanted in a horse there would be none to dispute it.—New York Com. Advertiser.

A Lover of the Antique.

Mrs. Limegas is very brie-a-brac in her tastes, but is not very ready to pay her bills. The other day the grocery-man called:

"Can I see Mrs. L.?" he said to the servant.

"What do you want?"

"I've got a bill here for some groceries she bought last month."

"Only a month old?" asked the girl, in surprise.

"Ain't that old enough?"

"No, sir, it is not. Mrs. Limegas, I'd have you know, is a lover of the antique, and should she pay a bill only a month old she would have a fit of nervous prostration."

"Well, that beats the deuce. When shall I come?"

"Oh, some time in the future. The older the bill gets the better; but don't you ever dare to come around with any of those vulgar new bills, that the stains of time have never touched," and she slammed the door in his face.—Merchant Traveler.

This method of preparing Liebig's soup for invalids is recommended by a foreign pharmaceutical journal: Take 480 parts of ordinary fresh wheat flour (not the finest), 480 parts of malt flour, and 15 parts of carbonate of potash, and mix well; add to this 960 parts of water and 4,800 parts of milk, and heat them very slowly, stirring constantly until the mixture begins to get thick; then remove the pot from the fire and stir for five minutes. It is then heated again until it begins to thicken, is removed once more, and finally heated until it boils. The whole is then passed through a fine sieve, which retains the bran of the malt flour. Made in this manner, the soup is sweet, and requires no sugar. It will keep for twenty-four hours.

Ex-Governor Hendricks' Hospitality.

Just then Mrs. Hendricks turned the laugh on the Governor by relating this anecdote. She said: "All his life Mr. Hendricks has been fond of entertaining his friends at his home. When we first set up at housekeeping we had but little, and often that was less, but Mr. Hendricks went right on with his hospitable habits. One day he came down and told me that he had invited a friend to supper with us that evening, and that he would like something extra for the meal. I was horrified. We had barely enough for ourselves, and I told him the supper could not be given unless extra supplies were purchased, but he said he had no money. I was just ready to cry when he happened to remember that a gentleman living about three miles in the country owed him a small fee, so he said he would take a walk out there and get it, and we would feast our friend. The day was hot, the road dusty: but out he went, collected the fee, and the banquet came off. I thought that experience would have cured him of inviting friends without knowing whether we were prepared to receive them, but it did not." "Does he embarrass you in that way now?" I asked. "Oh, no. For quite a number of years I have so arranged my household that he cannot surprise me."

An up-town pastor, who enlivens his Friday evening talks with anecdotes, is so fond of a joke that he would rather tell one at his own expense than not tell one at all. This is his latest: "I was writing by my study window, and a little Irish child was busying himself by throwing beans at the window. Losing all patience, I rushed out of the house, determined to frighten the boy. It happened that his mother was coming after him at the same moment, and we met by his side. I stormed at the child, and then, as the mother seemed excessively stupid, I gave her a piece of my mind. Finally, as a grand and overwhelming conclusion to my scolding, I said: 'A little discipline now with your children will save you much pain, if not disgrace, in the future. Think of that, madame; that is, if you ever do think.' 'Think, is it?' she replied, 'I think if you go back to your bedroom and wipe the ink aff av your nose you'd be prettier, even if you didn't make so much av a sensation.' It was not a soft answer, but it had the effect of turning away wrath."—Harper's Bazar.

A Bird Country.

That Guatemala, as the commencement of the narrowing land strip of North America, accommodates with homes a great many of the migratory birds, and that such a country, with its tropical climate on the coasts, eternal Spring in its middle elevation, and cold atmosphere on the heights, dotted by lakes and covered by a network of rivers, rivulets, brooks and brooklets, and blessed with the fruits of both hot and cool temperature, and has many creatures peculiarly its own, needs no expatiation. The birds, for instance, encountered here are stated to represent 600 species. There are no eagles, so to say, but three kinds of hawks, the same number of buzzards, or carrion crows, and six different maraunders at night. The sparrow family is the dominant in the land, for it numbers 410 species. The calibri, or humming-bird, is found in thirty-six species, belonging to twenty-eight genera. In the parrot family eight species are known as Auroras, all of brilliant and metallic plumage. The quetzal or quesal, the most beautiful and striking of all the Guatemala birds, and which stands on top of the State's escutcheon, forms a genus by itself. It inhabits the highest mountains, particularly in Verapes, but that relentless tyrant, fashion, penetrates its craggy fastness, butchers it unmercifully and ornaments her silly person with the borrowed plumage. Several hundred of them are thus slaughtered every year. Of the hooded parrots there are eight, while the common ones, called loros, are divided into fourteen species. Among the songsters the pitoreal, a small, black bird living on bananas, plantains and similar fruits, and resembling our catbird, is considered the finest, and called the nightingale of the country. In the gallinaceous order, one may mention the paujil, a magnificent wild creature, quail in make-up, turkey in size, and pheasant in color, with a long, slightly curved and round-pointed bill and a crest consisting of fine blue-black and white speckled feathers, of which the first is five and the last is three inches in length. When caught quite young it is easily tamed and contented in the poultry-yard, but in the first and second pairing season is sure to steal silently away into the wilderness. The turkey of the Cordilleras, called pavo de cacho, is peculiar to the highest volcanic summits. Singularly, the turkey of Peten is confined to that region, and is of a distinct species. Of partridges and quails there are seven, and of pigeons seventeen species, not counting the sea-pigeons, waders, as the heron, crane, shite-poke, sandpiper, snipe, woodcock, curlew, wigeon and rail or water hen, are believed to have more than 250 species. There is also a variety among the web-footed bird.

The Blue Grass Country Not Blue.

The term blue grass region of Kentucky is quite extensive in its application, but in its popular sense it applies only to the remarkable body of land in the center of the State, which comprises six or eight counties surrounding Lexington. This favored district, which scientific authority has styled "the very heart of the United States," is underlaid by a decomposable limestone, which imparts to the soil an unsurpassed fertility, and gives to our grass, known to botanists as Poe Pretensis, a rich and permanent luxuriance which it attains nowhere else. Hence the term "the blue grass region," a synonym for the acme of fertility of a district which also bears the proud distinction of "the gardan spot of the world." But why our grass is called "blue," when it never is blue, is one of the unsolved problems! It is always green except when in bloom, when the heads have a brownish purple tint. If, however, the term "blue grass" is meant for an abbreviation of blue limestone grass, then it will do, for certainly it only reaches its highest perfection on our wonderful blue limestone soil. Propagated without cultivation, it comes up thick and juicy early in the Spring, ripens in June, renews its growth in Autumn, and, retaining its verdure in spite of snow and ice, furnishes abundant and unequaled pasturage during the entire Winter. It is believed to be indigenous.

Garfield's Ambidexterity.

A gentleman who knew Garfield well tells a story which has never before been published of that remarkable man. "We were sitting," said this gentleman, "in the office of the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Thompson, of Indiana, waiting to be heard on some matter of routine business, when Garfield took his seat at a vacant desk near and commenced writing with both hands upon scratch-pads on either side of him. He seemed to write with one hand as freely as with the other. Both hands in fact appeared to move automatically. The only difference was that the lines on the tablet written with the left hand were reversed from the usual order. The consequence was that the writing on the left-hand tablet could not be read except by an expert, or by holding it up to a light or mirror. I looked at the one written with the left hand on its upper side, and while the lines seemed remarkably uniform they conveyed no meaning, but holding the paper up at the light I saw not only that the words written were the same as those on the tablet written with the right hand, but that every peculiarity in the formation of a letter which was found on the right hand tablet was exactly reproduced on the left hand. The achievement was a marvel to me, as I had never heard of it before, although I have since heard that many people do it. Garfield said that he often wrote that way whenever he wished to preserve an exact copy of what he was writing without having a copy made by letter-press, and that in this manner he saved a great deal of time without any more appreciable fatigue. I asked him how he got into that habit. He said that while teaching school once he had occasion to use his right hand to point out something, and that unconsciously he kept on writing upon the blackboard with his left. Upon turning to the blackboard to look at what he had written he observed that the writing was reversed, but that he had full use of his left hand for writing, and from that time he made use of both hands. He was, in fact, completely ambidextrous."—Washington Letter to Boston Journal.

LIGHT CHAMPION.

A QUESTION OF

Forgiveness or Dishonor

It was well that in the darkness he did not see the swift upward look of despair, the clenching of the small hands together. But she answered him, speaking carelessly:

"There's nothing to be afraid of. No one will hurt me here. You have London notions, Philip."

"You are too careless," he answered more quietly, and wrapping her shawl round her, for she shivered in the night wind, "and it is too cold for you to be out, if there were no other reason.—Who was with you?"

"I was talking to Nat Poynter," she answered in a low voice, crushing back Heaven knows what agony in her heart as she uttered the lie—the first she had ever uttered. And the first was to the man who loved her! "Shall we go back, Philip? I did not know it was so late. You are earlier than you expected to be, are you not? And did you meet Mr. Proctor?"

He told her, as they went back up the beach, of his visit to Mlwood, who he had met, and of some literary scheme that had been proposed to him, and the girl walked by his side, hearing all he said, but like one in a dream, and feeling all the while as though a dense black mist had risen up between her and Philip, as though she had fallen suddenly from his sphere.

And she knew that her own words had done this, and that she had taken one more step in that "failure of love and duty" which she felt, with a deadly shiver, he could scarcely forgive.

The housekeeper, who had come to her from her aunt's house, met her in the hall and took her shawl from her.

"A gentleman came to-night, ma'am," she said, "and asked for you. He did not give a name, but said he was an old friend."

"An old friend!" repeated Erica.

And the housekeeper added:

"I told him you had gone out on the beach, and then he went away."

"Thanks, Janet. It doesn't matter. Perhaps he'll call again."

And the girl entered the drawing-room, and began putting away some music that was lying about, with a sort of suppressed impatience in her manner which did not pass unnoticed by Philip St. John, and he glanced at her covertly in, and checked the sigh that could not ease the weight at his heart. She could scarcely bear the gentle, tender kiss he pressed on her brow when she came to say "good-night;" she was tired, she said, so weary, though it was early, and long afterwards when he came upstairs, she was lying with her hands locked in a strained clasp over the pillows, and the long, dark lashes that swept her cheek were wet still with tears, and she seemed restless in her very deep sleep.

"Poor child," he said, and did not now stifle the bitter sigh that passed his lips, "have I made one more miserable after all? Is it my fault? Love begets love, so they say; it may be so; but is it?"

CHAPTER VI.

RINGTON RACES. THE HORSE THAT WINS.

"I suppose, Erica," said Philip St. John, one evening about ten days after his wife's interview with her cousin, "that you would not care to go to these Rington races?"

He smiled as he made the assertion, pausing by her side in his walk up and down the long drawing room.

She was playing softly in the twilight, but her hands dropped from the keys, and she looked up with a sudden flush on her cheek and a sparkle in her eyes.

"Oh, yes, Philip, I should like it so much," she said; "will you take me?"

He laughed at her eagerness.

"Yes, my child, if you like; I am glad there is anything to amuse you in this dull place," he said; "since when, though, have you developed a taste for racing?"

"Oh, I don't care exactly for the racing," answered the girl, rising up and bending over some flowers in a stand near; "the scene is amusing, and the people are so odd. But if you had rather not go, Philip——"

She stopped.

"I had rather do what pleases you, my child. We can ride over, if you will not be tired."

"Tired!" Erica laughed at the notion. "I shall enjoy it. I suppose everybody will go from here. I remember, when I was a child, the Rington races were a grand holiday for all the country side."

"I saw your friend, Poynter, this morning," said St. John, "and he said he was going. I believe he has the presumption to hold some interest in the horses—a sweepstake, I suppose. I wonder at what class of Englishmen the passion for betting stops!"

"I don't know," said Erica, with some bitterness. "I think the farm-laborers, even, have a sweepstake.—Never mind them, Philip," she added, abruptly changing the subject, "you don't like Poynter?"

"Do I ever show it?" Philip said, with a smile, and playing with the soft moustache that drooped over his lip; "do you think he is keen enough to see that?"

"Not unless the feeling is reciprocal; you never show anything," said the girl; "but I am sure Nat doesn't take to you. In fact, I don't think he likes anyone but me. He is an extraordinary creature; do you know he never will let me pay for my boat, if I go out alone, but he doesn't refuse your money."

"Nor anyone else's; I imagine," said St. John, dryly; "there is something that does not please me about your favorite. No doubt he is a good fellow enough, as those sort of people go."

"You haven't much faith in 'those sort of people,' you intolerable patrician," said Erica, smiling.

"Not much in anyone," Philip said, and the girl bent low over her flowers, and drew her breath in with a quick, uncontrollable gasp, and the hand that was wandering among the roses trembled.

"Would he have faith in me," was her bitter thought, "if he could dream why I am glad to go to these races? Not for the pleasure; there will be none for me—only dread, and suspense, and feverish excitement."

She was restlessly impatient, the next morning, to be off, and though Philip smiled, even while vaguely wondering at her eagerness, he sighed to think how dull he must make her life, if she was so glad of anything that broke its monotony.

"Even country races," said the London man inwardly, as he swung his young wife lightly to the saddle, and then mounted himself.

They rode through the gates into the yellow autumn sunshine and the sweet, soft air, and Erica looked over to the sea, lying so placidly under the golden haze of light, and drew a long breath, as though she would fain cast off the weight that oppressed her, and, aided by the influence of sunshine and air, and exercise, she was more like herself during that ride than she had been for weeks.

Although Philip St. John regarded the Rington races with that sort of good-natured contempt which denizens of cities are apt to indulge towards country gatherings, they were by no means so looked upon by the county, and the gentry always came, and the bets ran high on the "favorite" in aristocratic county coteries.

Not a few sporting London men came down also, and honored the course with their presence and the horses with their [illegible] had been known to make a promising debut on the Rington turf.

Not only the ground outside that charmed line of ropes dividing the course from the outer world was crowded with the motley throng which races always attract, but the grand stand—for Rington boasted this glory—was also well filled with spectators, and there were three drags from some of the country houses, and a great many carriages of all descriptions, and several men and their fair companions were on horseback.

When Philip and Erica rode on to the ground, their appearance caused quite a sensation. Both were unmistakably of patrician order; both were singularly handsome, and were faultlessly mounted, and—still greater attraction—to the vast majority they both were strangers, and Philip laughed and Erica colored slightly at the notice they excited, and the comments passed on them.

"Who are they?" said Lord Cheshunt's daughter, looking after them as they rode by.

He was a county magnate, and lent a horse to Rington always, to patronize, he said, the good old sports of England; and no doubt it was in furtherance of this laudable object that the heir and hope of his house spent so much money on that crown and centre of old English sport—Epsom Downs.

"That's Philip St. John," said a gentleman on horseback near to Lady Juliet, who was staying at Cheshunt, and to whom St. John bowed and raised his hat. "I've met him in town—the writer, you know, Lady Juliet."

"Oh, indeed!" The young lady turned to look after him. "He is to be the famous man of the day, Mr. Arkwright, isn't he? And is that his sister with him?"

"That lady must be his wife, Lady Juliet," responded her cavalier. "I heard he was married—a Miss Vernon. I think she lived at Grayle. I know his brother—young fellow in the Lancers."

"Mr. St. John is exceedingly handsome," said Lady Juliet, fanning herself languidly, "and looks very haughty; but he can bear it—it suits his style."

Mr. Arkwright murmured something acquiescent, but did not venture to assert that Mrs. St. John was very beautiful.

"They are not bad," said Philip, looking round, with some mischief in his glance, at Erica: "a very tolerable gathering for the country. Ah, here is Proctor," as that gentleman came up and was presented to Erica.

"You're rather a stranger here," said Proctor, after the greetings had passed, "though I saw you bow to some of the people."

"I know very few," answered Philip, curbing back his horse to allow a little flower-girl to dive almost under its nose. "We live a sort of hermit life at Grayle, but in a week or two we shall be in town. Who is supposed to be the favorite to-day?"

"Oh, Fenton; belongs to a London man—Vickers, or some such name. But come and talk to my people—at least, the folks I'm staying with—the Deerings. They have heard so much of you, and are longing to be introduced to Mrs. St. John."

Erica laughed as they moved on a little towards a carriage in which a lady and her two daughters were seated, while two or three young men were "lords-in-waiting" on them.

It was rather a strange and not unpleasant feeling to Erica for anyone to wish to be introduced to her, and though she had lived so secluded a life, she had no shrinking from society, and possessed perfect grace and high breeding of manner that many a young lady "in society" might have envied.

"There is your friend Poynter," said Philip to her, a little while afterwards, when they had left the Deerings, and she turned with a half-start at the sound of the name which always brought with it its troop of painful associations.

But she smiled in answer to the boatman's respectful "Good-morning, Miss Erica," and said, brightly:

"So you have come to this provincial Derby, Nat? Are you interested in any particular horse?"

"Nought but a trifle, miss," said Nat, shaking his head with a shrewd look; "my money's too hard earned, and too scarce, to be risked on a horse."

"A very good rule, my friend," said Philip's soft, clear voice, a little sarcastic, Erica thought. "Heaven has endowed you with excellent principles."

And Nat glanced up sideways with a sort of idea that Mr. St. John was not speaking "straight-like," but not taking him by any means, and again touching his hat, moved off and disappeared among the crowd, almost brushing against two young men who were pushing their way through to get round to the starting point. He glanced at one of them and drew a soft whistle, but they were instantly separated from him by intervening people, and he looked after them, muttering:

"Good Lord! missy won't want to see him; and who's that young chap with him?"

But Arnold Murray had not the slightest interest [illegible] of running against Erica or Philip—indeed, he did not know that they were on the ground, and it was a sudden exclamation from his companion—a fair, handsome lad, with something of Philip St. John's cast of features, but little of his haughty resoluteness of expression, that made him stop.

"What the deuce is the matter?" staring around for a cause for Walter St. John's exclamation and sudden flush, and succeeding pallor. "Have you seen a ghost, man?"

"My brother is over there," Walter said, turning away, half ashamed of the plea, more than ashamed that he should have need to offer it. Had he ever before feared to meet the brother that loved him?

"Jove!" Arnold muttered between his teeth, and looked over to the spot where Philip and Erica's horses stood. "What made him come here? If that young fool meets him the game's all up. There'll be a deuce of a row all round."

"I'll go and see him," said Walter, suddenly, his fair face flushing crimson. "I hate to be ashamed to meet my own brother, as if I were a criminal."

Arnold laid a detaining hand on the young man's hand, just as he was about to start impulsively forward.

"What are you going to say to him?" he said. "He'll wonder how you got here, and you can tell him you've got a heavy bet on Fenton, of course, and he will be charmed, and think what a frank, above-board young fellow his brother is——"

"Hold your tongue, Murray, for Heaven's sake!" cried Walter, writhing inwardly under the taunt. "Come away out of this infernal crowd, and let me talk."

"All right," said Arnold, linking his arm through that of his companion. "I think that's an excellent plan of yours, for Philip St. John's eyes are everywhere."

And he breathed freely when he had got Walter away from the neighborhood of his brother.

"Talk away, young 'un," said Murray, lighting up a cigar, when out of the immediate vicinity of so many ears. "You're not getting frightened, and going to cave in?"

"I wish to Heaven I had never been fool enough to come here, or to listen to you at all," said Walter, energetically. "I hate to shrink from seeing Philip. I hate to think that I daren't meet his eyes fearlessly."

"Pooh, pooh," said Arnold, with good-humored indulgence; "now you're talking like the good boy of the play. Why in the world should you fear to do this, that, or the other? Why be afraid of a brother, just because you have had the sense for once in your life to use [illegible] think you were in the leading [illegible]."

"Hang it, with that chaff," said Walter, impatiently, but nevertheless flushing again with anger. "I wish I'd never listened to you."

"You won't say that, my boy, when Fenton leads, and you can pay those little debts of yours without this immaculate brother of yours," said Murray, laughing. "Never mind, don't apologize. Come on and see the start, and have some champagne; that'll put pluck into you again."

Walter stopped irresolute, and glanced back.

"I think I'll go back," he said.

Arnold turned on his heel with an exclamation of contempt.

"Go, then, and make a penitent confession, and promise never to sin again," he said, with a laugh and sneer that crushed the half-formed resolve more effectually than twenty minutes' reasoning. "Tell him of those other debts you said nothing about; young fellows will be young, you know; and, of course, he won't be disappointed in you."

Walter turned and strode forwards, setting his teeth, muttering an oath under his moustache, and Arnold Murray smiled quietly to himself. There was no need to say any more, he knew his man well enough, and went on talking of the probable winner and the race with admirable tact.

And then, just as they came up to the course again, the bell rang, and like a flash the horses went away, and a breathless excitement ran through the throng.

A few seconds' suspense as they flew past the stage coaches, past the grand stand, past the spot where Erica, watching with quick-drawn breath and parted lips, sat still by her husband's side.

"Keep your horse well in," he said, laying his hand on her rein and half smiling. "She is nearly as excited as you are. Why, Erica, I never thought you could care so much for a race."

The girl started and gave him a fleeting glance.

"Excited!" she said, putting up her hand to her brow. "I am—I—— Which horse is leading, Philip?"

"Not the favorite," said St. John, with a slight laugh. "Favorites never do. Have you bet on him, Erica?"

She scarcely heeded the question, bending forward, following the two who led—the others had been left far behind in the race—and of these two one was a few paces in advance. And just then a shout went up that seemed to rend the air, and drowned the coarser expressions of disappointment that fell from many.

"Which is it, Philip? What are they saying?" Erica said, almost sick with foreboding.

She was deathly pale now, and the hand that held the reins trembled. For the moment she had lost power to control the sinking of her whole being.

Philip glanced at her, and a shade came over his face, and for one brief second his lips settled into an almost stern gravity. He could not have found a cause, for he was only just conscious of the dread thrill that shot through his inmost heart. But he spoke to her in a low voice, some touch of severity in his soft tones:

"Erica, you are too excited. It is not like you. I will go and see which is the winning horse if you wish it."

His words, his tone, recalled her with a sharp stab of pain to herself, to the apprehension, the dread of what he might think.

She straightened herself in the saddle and was calm at once, outwardly—with what terrible effort perhaps she only knew, and was thankful for the short reprieve from observation while Philip rode off a few paces, and in a few minutes came back to her side.

"Prince Rupert is first," he said, "Fritz second, and Fenton a 'bad third,' if you know what that means."

"Poor Fenton!" Erica forced herself to smile and try and seem brighter. "And Major Deering was so confident he was to win."

"Major Deering's losses won't ruin him," St. John answered, laughingly.—"But come, Erica, we had better ride into the town."

"Mr. St. John!" cried a high voice, in the most cordial of accents, and he turned instantly to see Mrs. Deering, who had just driven up; "you and Mrs. St. John will do us the honor to join our party for lunch at the Cheshunt Hotel? You must, you really must."

"I should esteem it a pleasure, Mrs. Deering," answered Philip, with his courtly bow, "but I fear that my wife will be too tired; we have a long ride before us!"

"Oh, no, Philip, I am not tired," interposed Erica, with a suppressed eagerness that only he noticed; "how kind you are, Mrs. Deering; I shall be delighted."

"And if she is tired, Mr. St. John," said the lady, smiling, "I shall have so much pleasure in setting her down at Grayle."

"Setting me down,' Mrs. Deering," laughed Erica. "Grayle is four miles out of your way."

"Never mind, anthing is in my way," replied Mrs. Deering, serenely. "How kind of you, Mr. St. John, to favor us. Where is my husband? Dear me, those men and their horses, and their bets and things! Mrs. St. John, I congratulate you on possessing a husband who does not bet at all." [illegible] after.

Erica smiled, but winced inwardly, and Philip offered to go and find the missing husband, which offer was accepted with many thanks.

So there was a reprieve for Erica, and she drew a long breath of relief. Anything was welcome that staved off, if only for a time, any question or conjecture on Philip's part, and while he was gone she remained talking and laughing to Mrs. Deering and her son, who had just come up, conscious all the while of the dull fire burning into her heart. She heard of Fenton's failure and the probable causes thereof discussed, and took her part in the talk and jests, and through all she seemed like one round whom four walls are closing inevitably, certainly.

Someone touched her habit and she turned with a start—how everything startled her that day!

Nat Poynter stood near, and she backed her horse to his side, in obedience to a slight sign from him. Fortunately Mrs. Deering was engaged in an animated war of words with Archie Proctor, and the crowd had drained off somewhat.

Nat quietly put a paper into her hand with a low spoken "He bade me give it to you, missy," and then he sauntered off and the girl glanced at the writing and her heart throbbed heavily as she read the words, "Be at the south gate to-morrow night at eleven. He will be away."

She read and crushed the paper in her hand, putting it in the bosom of her habit, just as Mrs. Deering called out:

"Come, my dear Mrs. St. John, here are the two husbands come back to do their duty in attending us; Algy, go and bring your sister to the carriage."

Erica lifted her eyes, impelled by some instinct stronger than reason, to look across the carriage at Philip as she rode up, and for an instant she met his glance full, and then her own wavered and fell.

She read in that glance a strange questioning, an anxious perplexity. Before it her very soul died down.

Was all—all she held on earth slipping away from her? Must she suffer it all for the sake of the vow laid on her?

Almost, in the wild anguish that swept over her, she had resolved to throw herself on his mercy, to break the veil of deception that was drawing her away so surely from the shelter of his love. Almost—for, while she yet paused on the threshold of that confession, the [illegible] hopes of a bolder life, and [illegible] dazed and bewildered, she could once more lift her eyes to see, nought but the shattered wreck of love and honor lay at her feet; only life—dull, perpetual life—remained.

She need have had no fear of question or conjecture from Philip that night. She was weary and spent, he saw well, by the time they reached home again, and whatever the cause of her strange manner, her evident anxiety of look, it would be cruel to put another burden on her.

It might be, too, that deep hidden in his own heart lay the dread of an answer that would crumble to dust the brighter hope that had come to dwell with him since he had known her—an answer that would once more throw back all the new-born love and trust he had cherished as something so sweet, as previous to learn from her own lips that her marriage had been a mistake, that he could not make her happy—for, ever mistrustful of his own power to attract love, this was the one thought that shadowed his heart. Yet he could not live in uncertainty; he could bear—had borne—to have every fibre of love that reached out to cling to some object crushed back on himself; but he could not, day by day, rest in a fool's paradise.

To-morrow he would know what trouble lay upon her.

To-morrow, but the "to-morrow" never came.

CHAPTER VII.

TERRIBLE NEWS.

When, that night, he parted from her—for he had work to do, he said, that would keep him up very late—he laid one hand on her shoulder, and with the other swept back from her forehead the soft hair that fell over it, and her eyes drooped before his. The love that spoke so silently in them seemed to plead to her for something she had withheld from him.

She could not meet his look; she could scarcely bear the grave and lingering kiss he pressed on her brow.

He felt her shrink and tremble in his clasp, and dropped his hand, releasing her, and his quiet "Good-night, Erica," sounded cold and measured, and the face she barely glanced at was set and stern.

The sun was shining brightly, yet early the next morning, when Philip turned down the lamp that had been burning unheeded for many hours, for he had not gone upstairs at all when he had finished his work, but sometimes pacing up and down the library, sometimes for a few moments resting, he had passed those hours of the early morning, haunted by a dim foreboding that all his strong spirit could not shake off, trying to think out some cause other than that direful one he so feared, for the change in Erica; but thought brought no relief and no solution.

He looked at his watch and found it to be seven o'clock, and then threw open the window and suffered the misty air from the sea—yet unwarmed by the sun's rays—to blow in and cool his throbbing pulses.

And, as he stood there, from afar came the sound of steady, swift tramps of a horse's hoofs—nearer and nearer—and he wondered in a vague sort of fashion who this early rider might be, and where he was going.

The sound came closer and yet closer, till Philip could see the horse and rider tearing down the roadway from Rington at a pace which would try the mettle of any horse, and, with a suddenness that almost sent the creature on its haunches, draw up at his own gates.

The rider flung himself from the saddle, and pushed open the wicket, and Philip saw—with a fierce heart-throb in which seemed gathered all the haunting fears of the night—that it was Archie Proctor that was coming over the lawn; he sprang to meet him, and led him into the house.

"St. John, I am the bearer of fearful news," Proctor said, when he could speak. "I cannot break it."

"What has happened? I can bear anything but suspense," said Philip, quickly, as Proctor paused, turning aside. "Speak out, I am on the rack."

"Forgive me if I am abrupt; there is no time. St. John, your brother was found dead late last night in a wood near Rington."

"My brother! Oh, God!" Philip staggered back a pace, catching blindly at a chair near, his breath coming in labored throbs. Only for a moment, though it might have been to him hours, and then the stern control that was a necessity now and a habit of his life asserted itself.

"So, that is past," he said; "tell me all now, I can bear it."

And he never moved or spoke while Proctor told him in sorrowful accents, how, last night at twelve o'clock, a groom from a house some miles off going home from Rington, had found the body of a young man whom he had seen at the races that day, laying in a wood not far from the pathway; he was quite dead, and there had evidently been foul play, for there was blood trickling from a wound in the forehead, but his watch and a few pounds and some other little things of trifling value were untouched. He had at once gone back to Rington and got help, and had the body taken to the Cheshunt Hotel, where it lay now.

"I was staying there that night," Proctor said, "and saw him brought in, and I at once recognized Walter."

He paused a moment to master his emotion, but Philip said, quietly:

"Yes, you saw him; go on."

"I only stopped to hear the doctor's verdict, and see that the police had all the information we could get, and then came off like mad for you."

"Thank you," Philip said, in the same unmoved way.

"Can you throw any light on it, St. John?" asked Proctor, after a pause.

"None. I did not know Walter had left London."

"You won't take it as any harm meant to the dead," said Proctor, "if I give you my idea, which is founded on some knowledge."

"Certainly not; say on."

"The landlord of the Crown came over and identified your brother as a young man who had arrived the day before at his place for the races. He said he seemed rather out of spirits sometimes, and at others very excited, and he thought he (Walter) was greatly interested in the chances of the favorite. He was a good deal with another fellow, also a London man, and after the race they both seemed very much put out.—He heard them, he thought, having high words together, and then they went to a champagne supper given by young Cheshunt, and afterwards both left the hotel. That was about eleven o'clock."

Philip had listened in perfect silence to this recital; not a quiver of the lip, not a tremor of an eyelid, betrayed the agony that seemed to him more bitter to bear than the knowledge of his young brother's death. Walter, the one being he had loved, and who had seemed so to cling to him, had failed, and left empty yet another niche in his life. One more idol remained to him. Was that to be shattered too? He wrenched himself with a quick-caught breath from those dark thoughts, that he felt were unnerving him, and spoke again.

"This man's name—do you know it?"

"Martin, I think, the landlord said. Why? Do you know anyone it could be?"

Hardened Liver.

Five years ago I broke down with kidney and Liver complaint and rheumatism.

Since then I have been unable to be about at all. My liver became hard like wood; my limbs were puffed up and filled with water.

All the best physicians agreed that nothing could cure me. I resolved to try Hop Bitters I have used seven bottles; the hardness has all gone from my liver, the swelling from my limbs, and it has worked a miracle in my case, otherwise I would have been now in my grave T. W. Money, Buffalo, Oct. 1, 1881.

Poverty and Suffering.

"I was dragged down with debt, poverty and suffering for years, caused by a sick family and large bills for doctoring.

I was completely discouraged, until one year ago, by the advice of my pastor, I commenced using Hop Bitters, and in one month we were all well, and none of us have seen a sick day since, and I want to say to all poor men, you can keep your families well a year with Hop Bitters for less than one doctor's visit will cost. I know it."—A Workingman.

AXIOMS FOR DAIRYMEN.

The milking qualities of a cow depend more upon those of her sire's mother than upon those of her own mother.

One cow which will give 5,000 pounds of milk in a season will bring more net profit than three cows producing only 3,000 pounds each.

Good butter and cheese cannot be made from the milk of cows which are deprived of pure water.

A putrid carcass polluting the air of a pasture will spoil not only the milk of the cows running there, but also the entire contents of the vat into which the tainted milk is poured at the factory.

The patron who will bring impure or imperfect milk to the factory is like a passenger boring holes in the ship which keeps him and all the others afloat.

The one sure way to have good cows is to raise them yourself.

The exclusive feeding of clover to cows gives hard cheese and soft butter.

Shaker Blood Syrup

Is designed to meet the wants of a large portion of our people who are either too poor to employ a physician, or are too far removed to easily call one, and a still larger class who are not sick enough to require medical advice and yet are out of sorts and need a medicine to build them up, give them an appetite, purify their blood, and oil up the machinery of their bodies so it will do its duty willingly. No other article takes hold of the system and hits exactly the spot like Shaker Blood Syrup. It works like magic, reaching every part of the human body through the blood, giving to all renewed life and energy.

My friend, you need not take our word. Ask your neighbor who has just taken one bottle. He will tell you that "It's the best dollar I ever invested."

Shaker Syrup Company: Dear Sirs—Although greatly prejudiced against patent medicines in general, I was induced, from the excellent reports I had heard of your Blood Syrup, to try a bottle, last December for dyspepsia and general prostration, and I have received very gratifying results from its use. I am now using the second bottle, and consider it a very valuable remedy for indigestion and its attendant troubles.

Yours truly,
O. F. Twitchell,
Gorham, N. H.

Dyspepsia A gentleman who has been suffering from the Debility and Languor peculiar to this season, says: "Shaker Blood Syrup is putting new life right into me. I have gained ten pounds since I began to take it." Has taken five bottles. Shaker Blood Syrup is sold by Osmond & Walsh. Price, $1.00 per bottle, or six for $5.

MUSICAL.

"Give us a tune," requested a cornet to the violin.

"Oh, I don't know a single tune," responded the violin, "you only get me into a scrape. Play a tune yourself."

"No sir-ee," replied the cornet, "I'll be blowed if I do."

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.

Many buildings in Edinburg, Bath, and other cities in Great Britain, were partially demolished by lightning last week. Dundee was enveloped in dense darkness for an hour and traffic was suspended. Several persons were killed by lightning including the Earl of Lauderdale, who was overtaken by a storm while out riding. The storm was almost unexampled in its fury.

Failure Impossible.

When Polson's Nerviline is used for pain. It matters not how long standing it may be or how obstinate other remedies failed to relieve, Nerviline will conquer it promptly. BEFORE AND AFTER.

"Clara, when you get to heaven, if you see George Wilson there, tell him I hope you will forget the provocation he gave me."

"Oh, ma, I shall be too much engrossed."

"Yes, I remember I got rather cross with the same complaint before we were married, but now I cannot go through his pockets in the morning without waking him up."

"I marry that fellow, ma!" exclaimed Nellie. "No, I would rather die than have him. What! marry him without his pains and aches. Never; not till he tries Crowfoot Bitters."

THE REGULAR BOARDER.

"For ten years past," said the new boarder, "my habits have been as regular as clock work. I rose on the stroke of six; half an hour later I sat down to breakfast; at 7 I was at work, dined at twelve, ate supper at 6, and was in bed at 9:30; ate only heavy food, and hadn't a sick day in all that time.

"Dear me," said the deacon, in sympathetic tones, "and what were you in for?"

And in the awful silence that followed you could hear the hash grate his teeth.

Wooden sailing vessels are being rapidly superseded by iron steam craft for even coastwise trade in Great Britain. Higher freight is considered to be more than compensated by speedier and more certain voyages. This is what a circular of the iron trade says forth: "Perhaps 10 per cent, on an average, of our whole yearly export in iron was, a few years ago, always on board ship, and the uncertainty of arrival further caused buyers to keep considerable quantities in their stores; but every year, and even every month, changes the position, and now we calculate the quantities on the seas do not amount to 5 per cent of the total export. In fact, large stocks afloat and ashore are becoming a thing of the past." A useful lesson from British experience might be learned with advantage on this side of the Atlantic.

A Texas man has a flock of a thousand goats. This don't look as if Magony was playing out. Just so long as the goat crop holds out Masonry and Odd-Fellowship will live. These anti-secret society folks must exterminate the goat if they would strike a fatal blow to Masonry, etc. Without a goat these societies must die.

A HARD BED.

An old Scotch lady from the country slept one night lately in the house of a friend. Her bed happened to be a plain hard mattress, so much recommended as more healthy to lie upon than a bed of down. Next morning the old lady was asked how she slept overnight. "Not very weel," was the reply, "for my old bones are nain wi' that hard bed o'yours." "O, but Janet," do'yes not know that all the great physicians say that it is more healthy to sleep on beds hard as a board?" replied the host. "Oh, ay," said Jane, "and I suppose that's what you toon's bodies call a Board o'Health."

WHY SHE DIDN'T THINK SO.

He was a wild-eyed scion of the sunny south, and had fastened like a leech to the prettiest girl at the place; the placid moon was shining as she said:

"I think you said you came from Georgia, Mr. Firanstow?"

"Yes, I am a genuine 'cracker.'"

"Why, I should never have thought it," she said, and as he softly asked the reason, she whispered:

"Crackers usually have the sense to go off when they are fired."

The "Golden Lion" to the Front.

Fair, VanEvery & Co. are having their large plate fronts painted, silvered and beautified in order to display their magnificent new fall stock daily arriving. Their importations are large and well selected, to meet the demands of their increasing trade. Every department is being filled to the ceiling and every shelf contains a bargain. 33-tf.

A Splendid Shop.

Messrs. Fair, VanEvery & Co. seem determined to keep the prominent position they have won for the Golden Lion as a dry goods house. They neglect nothing that will make their shop the fitting receptacle of the splendid stock of all kinds of goods which it contains. The latest improvement is a wonderful brightening of their shop front. The pillars and pilasters of the doors and windows have been painted a dead black, the champfers being picked out with silver. The effect is very brilliant, and, with neatly dressed show windows, no shop front outside the cities, and very few inside, can compare with it for richness and beauty of effect.

More Light.

The Electric Light Company is extending its operations rapidly. On Thursday one of the managers of the Royal Electric Light Company, of Montreal, was in town and all the electric light plant was formally transferred to the town company. Arrangements are going on for the increase of the number of lights, the local company having placed an order for another electric light machine of 25-light power. It is to be forwarded at once and, and the local company is also considering the introduction of the incandescent lights suitable for dwellings. Great praise is due them for the enterprise that places Peterborough in so foremost a position amongst the towns and nominal cities of Ontario.

A Thriving Business.

Messrs. Porter Bros., successors to Mr. T. Fitzgerald, are doing a thriving and driving trade in carriage building, etc. Not only in general carriage making are they taking a leading position, but in the line of special work they are making an enviable record. A few days ago they turned out for Mr. Thos. Hooper one of the neatest and nobbiest milk expresses on the road—the very cream of milk wagons—and a fine new delivery van for Mr. C. B. Smith, finished in a style of splendor and neatness corresponding with his new establishment, has been turned out. Both reflect great credit on the capabilities and taste of Messrs. Porter Bros., and so long as their shops turn out such first-class work will their's deserve the title of a thriving business.

At the Driving Park.

The track on the Driving Park is now in good shape, and a fine programme of sport will be presented on Saturday, September 6th. The first event will be a running race for horses, half mile heats, for which two substantial purses will be offered. The second is a half mile foot race, for $150 a side, between Hamley and Williamson. A fine day's sport may confidently be expected.

"Central Park."

On Monday evening action was taken in the Council to remove the sheds from the "Old Burying Ground," preparatory to converting it into a park, and to change this lugubrious title for the title of "Central Park." If these steps had been taken months ago, and there was nothing to prevent, the park might now have been open to the public, but now it will be ready for use about Christmas.

Church Re-opening Services.

Silver collections at the close of each service. Tea meeting on Monday evening, Aug. 25th. Tea served in town hall at 6.30. Addresses in church by Revs. Manning, Tovell and Dr. Carman. Admission 40 cents, single; 75 cents, double. The public invited.

Lecture on Decoration.

By advertisement in our local columns it will be seen that Mr. F. Arnold Haultain, M.A., will deliver a lecture on Decoration, in the school room of St. John's church, on Monday evening, August 25th, in aid of the funds of the Peterborough branch of Dr. Barnardo's homes. The lecture will be practically illustrated. Mr. Haultain is a young gentleman of no ordinary ability and culture, and he will doubtless say well what is well worth hearing. Besides, the object of the lecture should ensure a good attendance. Lecture to begin at 8 o'clock. Tickets 25 cents, or five for $1.00—for sale at bookstores of A. L. Davis & Co., Salisbury & Co., and T. Menzies, and at the Review office.

A Splendid Chance.

It will be seen by an advertisement in another column that Mr. D. W Dumble offers for sale a number of Building Lots in various parts of the town on ten years credit. No money down, interest only to be paid for first five years, and thereafter yearly instalments with the right to pay at any time as may suit the convenience of the purchaser. This offer enables a poor man to use his money in erecting a building, and so he gets rid of rent, and secures a home for himself. Building will be cheap this year and no doubt many will take advantage of this very liberal offer. Besides lots in town, Mr. Dumble offers a number of lots in Ashburnham, and several park lots on the same terms. Call at his office and see plans, &c.

The "Test of Time"

is infallible, and never has this test been better stood than by Dr. J. D. Kergan, of Detroit, Mich. and his famous Medical Council, organized in 1878, and reorganized in April last as the "British-American Medical & Surgical Institute." Every year has but increased their reputation for unrivalled professional skill. Over 40,000 permanent cures have been effected by them, a wonderful record when it is remembered that they treat only chronic diseases and deformities, which have generally been treated unavailingly for years by ordinary physicians before falling into their hands. Surgeons of the above institution will visit Peterborough on Friday and Saturday next, August 22nd and 23rd, and may then be consulted free of charge at the Grand Central Hotel. All who desire skillful and effectual treatment by competent and honorable specialists, should call upon them, or if that is impossible, should write to Dr. J. D. Kergan, Detroit, Mich.

The Fire Fiend.

On Friday morning about three o'clock a villianous attempt was made by an incendiary to destroy the storeroom of Mr. Kingan's hardware store. A fire had been started on the right hand side of the door of the frame store house, Chambers street, at the rear of his shop. The fire was discovered and promptly put out before any damage worth mentioning was done. Any doubt of the fire being the work of an incendiary is dispelled by the fact that the smell of coal oil was distinct on the clap boards that had been saturated with it. There can be little doubt of the necessity of a night watchman or two on the streets of Peterborough. It was only by accident that reputable citizens discovered the fire on Friday morning. A few moments more and a serious fire would have been the result. Even a little town like Napanee of 4,000 inhabitants has a night watchman, (paid by the merchants) and the record he keeps of every night's events, shows that he discovers and puts out many an incipient fire, without making any alarm. The damage which he has thus averted would amount to over fifty times the sum paid for his services. Peterborough is a wide-awake and go-ahead town, but in some things it seems to be woefully behind-hand.

Our New Watchmaker, Mr. Hughan, comes well recommended, and we are sure any work entrusted to him will be done in good style. Office lately occupied by Elias Burnham, Simcoe Steet. 18-tf

PETERBOROUGH AND REST TORONTO.

On Tuesday a fine days' cricketing took place on the Ashburnham grounds between teams of the Peterborough and east Toronto clubs. The result was the home team heralded over the visitors easily. Peterborough went first to the bat and put together a total of 63, to which Strathy subscribed a dozen, and Grundy half a score, the only double figures. Toronto followed, and only got together 41, Cruesthwaite alone passing the decimal point with 12. Peterborough's second innings totalled 57, to which Strathy contributed 26, piled up in fine style, and Max Hamilton 10. The Torontos went in with 115 to make, but they only got 51 at the fall of the last stump, being defeated by 63 runs. Following is the score:

Ho for Tweed!

Remember the grand union excursion of the Foresters and Workmen, to Tweed and Stoco Lake, to-day (Thursday). Train leaves Peterborough at 8 o'clock a. m. Return tickets only $1.00.

Re-opened.

St. Luke's church, Ashburnham, which has been in the hands of the painters and decorators for the last two weeks, will be used again for Divine service on Sunday next. We understand the Toronto workmen have made an excellent job and have greatly beautified the nave. Service at 11 a.m. and 7 p.m.

A Family Feud.

A family on Simcoe street, tough by nature and Tougher by name, have felt the effects of the "dog days." The other day they got into a family fight, and when constable Adams interfered the fight was discontinued, and hostilities directed against him. Pater familias was fined $10 at the police court for keeping a disorderly house, and the son a like amount for resisting the constable.

Foot-Racing.

On Thursday afternoon, September the 4th the second heat for the Barlee medal, now held by Strickland of Lakefield, will be run on the Driving Park. The distance will be a quarter of a mile, and there will be a sharp struggle, two of the four or five contestants having each secured one of the three heats necessary to hold the medal. Other races trotting and running, are being arranged for that day.

Lecture.

A lecture on DECORATION (practically illustrated) will be delivered by MR. ARNOLD HAULTAIN, M. A., in St. John's Church Chapel, on Monday, August 25th, in aid of the Peterborough Branch of DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES. To commence at 8:00 o'clock, p.m. Tickets: 25 cents, or 5 for $1.00. For sale at A. L. Davis', T. Menzies', J. Salisbury's, and at the Review office. The Rev. V. Clementi has kindly consented to take the chair.

Sunday Sermons.

On Sunday last Dr. Barnardo again fills to the doors, two churches, and preached two excellent sermons. In the morning he occupied the pulpit of the Baptist church and preached from the text: Micah, chap. vii., v. 8—"Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy; when I fall I shall arise; when I sit in darkness the Lord shall be a light unto me." In the evening Charlotte street Methodist church was crowded to listen to a stirring discourse from the text: "How long halt ye between two opinions?"—I. KINGS, chap. xviii., v. 21.

Court House Park.

Last Friday night the Fire Brigade Band played a grand selection of airs in the Court House Park. The music was of classical order, comprising the overture from Verdi's "Hernani," and the Kyrie and Gloria from Mozart's "Twelfth Mass." Of course the public had to enjoy the music from a distance, and persons sitting outside their homes in the west end enjoyed the melodious strains, softened by distance into exquisite sweetness. A great deal of indignation was felt by the public at being excluded from the Park, and the indignation was at it height on Monday evening, at the breach of hospitality made in refusing our Toronto visitors admission to the Park, and threats were made of tearing down the fence. Sometime they will be carried into effect and the slow-going authorities will find the fence around the Park, which they refuse to open to the public, prostrated as were the wooden awnings some years ago.

The Toronto Excursion.

A very large number arrived in town by the O. & Q. on Monday with the annual excursion of the Sons of Scotland, Toronto. The first train arrived at 12.30 with a dozen well-filled coaches. The second train, with nearly as many excursionists, arrived at 1.20. After dinner the members of the Robert Bruce Camp of the Sons of Scotland, headed by the Massey Manufacturing Company's Band, marched to Central Park, where a programme of Scottish sports and games was carried out. Several of our merchants honored the visitors by decorating their places of business. Messrs. Fair, VanEvery & Co. made an elaborate display, also, Mr. J. Hackett, A. McNeil and John Erskine, while the members of the local St. Andrew's society showed the customary courtesies to their brither Scots. The party, which numbered about 1,400, got off safely on two trains at 6.30 and 7 o'clock.

LAWN SOCIAL.

A Successful and Enjoyable Affair.

An emphatically successful lawn social, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of the Charlotte street Methodist church, was held in the beautiful gardens and grounds of Geo. A. Cox, Esq., on Tuesday evening. There was an immense attendance, over 1,000 persons having been present; still there was room for all on the spacious and highly beautiful grounds surrounding the mansion. These were, through the kindness of the Electric Light Company, brilliantly illuminated with five electric lights, and the effect of the brilliant light gleaming on the blooming flower masses of the parterre, or on the open stretches of sward, relieved by the dense shadows of the trees, was surpassingly beautiful. The scene was a most animated and delightful one. The deliciously pleasant softness of the air, the hundreds of people moving to and fro, or resting on the abundant seats provided, the sweet strains of the band music, with the tinkling accompaniment of glass and china at the refreshment stands, made a combination of enjoyable conditions seldom equalled. The music of the Fire Brigade Band was surpassingly excellent. They were liberal with their selections, all of the highest order, and their efforts were greeted with cordial applause—their audience was a cultured one and thoroughly appreciated the high-class music provided. The programme included a beautiful selection from Verdi's Il Trovatore, the Kyrie and Gloria from Mozart's Twelfth Mass, a military Fantasia, descriptive of the battle of Ekowe, in Zululand, which was as charming a realism as could be produced by music. The fanfare of the war trumpets, the call to charge, the sounds of battle and the shouts of the fierce Zulus were all faithfully rendered. The band also rendered in charming style two sets of vocal waltzes—"Dream Faces" and "Under the Twinkling Starlight," besides a fine selection of miscellaneous music. It is safe to say that the band never played better, individually and collectively, than they did last Tuesday night, and they never had a more appreciative audience for their superb music. During the evening refreshments were served abundantly, and the ladies are, in all respects, to be congratulated on conducting the most brilliant and successful lawn social that ever took place in the town. So pleasantly did the time pass that the company remained till eleven o'clock. The Charlotte street Sunday School will be richer in funds by about $120, as the financial result of the social. The public who were present are under a debt of gratitude to Mr. Cox for throwing open his magnificent grounds and thus providing the possibilities of the enjoyment realised on Tuesday night.

TOWN COUNCIL.

The Night Watchman Question.

A special meeting, at the call of the Mayor, (who was however, absent) was held on Monday evening.

A. Rutherford, Esq., was made chairman, who explained that the meeting had been called to consider the appointment of night watchmen, in view of recent events in the town.

After routine,

COMMUNICATIONS

were presented

From the Secretary of the Board of Health, respecting the Hunter street drain, and directing that immediate action be taken respecting the police cells, Spaulding's Bay, sawdust in the river, and submitting the report of the Medical Health Officer, Dr. Clarke, which will be found in another column of this issue.

HUNTER STREET DRAIN.

Mr. Menzies said respecting Hunter street drain, that Messrs. Clurton and Stevenson and the other petitioners had already received permission to go on and re-build the drain.

Mr. Kelly pointed out that the Council had no power to give such permission; the plans of all drains to be built had to be submitted to the Provincial Board of Health.

Dr. Clarke was heard and said he considered a drain on George street was the most pressing matter. The want of a good sewer on George street forced merchants to throw slops and refuse in large quantities on the ground in rear of their premises, which developed germs of diseases, not only the more serious ones, but many of the simpler and commoner forms. He did not think the drain was large enough, and was informed that it was also leaky. He did not know anything of more pressing importance, except, perhaps, Spaulding's Bay, than a sufficient drain on George street. He thought at least a portion of Spaulding's Bay should at once be filled up. It was a fruitful source of malaria. The Hunter street drain caused an accumulation of filth by the connecting shaft between that and the sewer on George street being lower than either.

Mr. Rutherford said the town had paid the greater portion of the cost of the drain, and it was responsible for the nuisance.

Mr. Cahill said that the drain was a matter of small importance to the general public, and if the Board of Health did not like it, let them close it up. Respecting the sewers and other improvements, he would ask if the Board of Health had thought of where the money was to come from. He approved of all these suggestions, but the financial matter was a serious one. No sane man would advocate building a sewer down George street to end below the locks. He advocated allowing the drain on Hunter street to be built by local taxation.

Acting Mayor Rutherford said the Council, not the Board of Health, were bound to furnish funds.

Mr. Kelly said the Hunter street parties were willing to be taxed for the new drain, and it was the duty of the Council to superintend the work and see that it was done. Let the town build the drain and impose a local tax to pay for it.

The Clerk said he did not think the Hunter street petition was sufficiently signed.

The portion referring to the lock-up was referred to the Special Committee appointed in re lock-up and Bank of Toronto buildings.

Accounts were presented from the Board of Health and ordered to be paid.

A petition from Donald Chisolm and others, for a sidewalk on Antrim street, was referred to the Street Committee with power to act.

THE SIDING BY-LAW.

A communication from the Town Solicitor was received, respecting the Yelland siding by-law, and stating that, in his opinion, the by-law would be held invalid, and that the clause respecting compensation was invalid, because no security had been provided for by the by-law.

FINANCE.

Mr. Davidson, chairman, presented the report of the Finance Committee, recommending payment of the following accounts:

James English	$ 2 40
B. Morrow	7 55
R. B. Rogers	36 35
Mrs. J. F. Jeffers	18 00

Report adopted.

NIGHT WATCHMEN.

Mr. Kendry moved, seconded by Mr. Hartley, that the matter of appointing a night watchman be referred to the Committee on appointments, with power to appoint two night watchmen to be under the authority of the Chief of Police.

Mr. Douglass did not think there was any necessity for two policemen in the day time, and one of the present force, put on at night with one night watchman, was all that was needed.

Messrs. Kendry and Hartley thought the present police force was none to large for the daytime, and it would be unwise to curtail it. They had their hands full at present.

Mr. Cahill favored the rearrangement of the present force, so that the desired end could be gained. The matter of expense was a serious objection to increasing the force. The matter had been left to the committee on appointments and it would be better to leave it in their hands to report. He objected to adding a permanent burden on the ratepayers.

Mr. Hartley was not in favour of a permanent force, but there was necessity for a season of vigilance at the present time.

Mr. Kelly alluded to the recent burglaries and argued that a couple of night watchmen would have acted as a deterrent. It was possible to insure against fire but not against robbers. Two night watchmen were necessary. The present police force had all they could do.

Mr. Rutherford pointed out the necessity of night watchmen.

Mr. Green pointed out that the matter had been referred to the committee on appointments. They had done nothing and the council should, as this meeting was called specially for the purpose, decide and take immediate action.

Mr. Yelland doubted the usefulness of night watchmen for preventing fires. He would not be in favour of two men anyway. Referring to the lock up and the demand for a new one, he said the present one was good enough for the unlucky scoundrels who set places on fire.

Mr. Kendry thought one man was utterly useless at night.

Mr. Allen thought the present force had enough to do.

Mr. Davidson moved, seconded by Mr. Cahill, in amendment that the two assistant constables take the duties of night watchmen alternately, their duties to begin and terminate at 12 o'clock, and that they take weekly or fortnightly turns of night duty.

Mr. Cahill said it would not do the police force any harm to take the duties alternately at night. It was not fair to burden people who had no money, with taxes to pay for watching other people's money.

Mr. Douglass moved in amendment to the amendment, seconded by Mr. Yelland, that our night watchmen be appointed to go along with one of the assistant constables.

Both amendments were lost and on the original motion being submitted, Mr. Davidson raised the point of order, that as it involved an expenditure of money, it would require eight members voting affirmatively to carry it.

The chairman held the objection well taken, and the vote of the council on his ruling was taken with the following result:

YEAS.—Messrs. Cahill, Davidson, Yelland and Douglass—4.

NAYS.—Messrs. Allis, Kelly, Green, Kendry, Hartley and Rutherford—6.

Less than eight members voting against the chairman's ruling, it was sustained.

Motions to reconsider, all the motions and amendments were lost.

Mr. Davidson moved, seconded by Mr. Cahill, that the matter of appointing a night watchman be referred to the committee on Appointments, the assistant constables to perform the duties till the report of the committee.—Carried.

CENTRAL PARK.

Mr. Cahill moved, seconded by Mr. Davidson, that the mayor be requested to confer with the Minister of Militia, with a view of securing control of the drill shed, such control not to interfere with the keeping of the arms and accoutrements of the local militia.—Carried.

The council adjourned till Thursday night to consider the estimates.

BOON TO THE BUSY FARMER.

Noxon's Low-Down Twine Binder.

On Friday last, through the courtesy of Mr. John Bennets, of Messrs. Fife & Bennett, Agricultural Implements Agents, we paid a visit to the farm of Mr. William Swinton, First Line of Smith, to witness the operation of a new low-down self-binder, made by Noxon Bros., Ingersoll. It is called the "Noxon Bros Low-Down Platform Binder," and certainly represents a huge forward stride in the simplification and improvement of labor-saving farm machinery. The machine is small in size and looks at a distance not unlike an old style reaper. The simplicity of its appearance, as compared with the "high-up self-binders," suggests to the farmer the question, "Why, where is the binder?" and when the present machine was unloaded at the station, the inquiry was repeatedly made: "Where is the rest of it?" A brief sketch of how the machine works will indicate some of its advantages. The grain, swept backward by the reel, falls on the platform and on endless chain carriers revolving parallel to the cut. These carry the grain to the "pickers," which revolve at right angles to the endless chains, and carry the accumulating grain to the "packers," which compress the bundle, and as soon as sufficient quantity of grain is gathered to make a sheaf the bundle engages a lever which sets the binding machinery in operation, the sheaf is tied with cord, the knot being the same as in other self-binders, and is delivered at the right hand side of the machine, out of reach of the team on the next round. A simple wire device holds down the heads of the straw while being gathered, and thus prevents them from flopping about and shelling when the grain is very ripe. An ingenious arrangement, simple and effective, works against the butts of the grain and makes the butt of the sheaf perfectly square and even. So compact is the gathering and tying machinery that the sheaf is at no time elevated two feet above the platform. The chief beauty of this binder is its immense capacity of give and take, or, in other words, its adaptability to the changing conditions required in actual work. Even the driver's seat is adjusted to any desired angle almost instantly, while the driver, from his seat, controls a set of levers for different purposes. One lever raises the whole of the machinery, both sides bodily at once. Another lever adjusts the position of the band, nearer to or farther from the butt, according to the length of the straw; another lever adjusts the tension, so that if it is desired to bind damp grain loosely it can be done, another regulates the size of the sheaf, so that the driver, if he finds the grain heavier in one part of the field than in another, can make his sheaf in proportion. All these can be operated while the machine is in motion, without causing a moment's delay or stoppage. The depth of the platform can be increased in a moment to accommodate long or short straw. An 8½ inch driving wheel admits of the machine being used on damp or soft soils, and its extreme lightness —only 1,050 lbs.—is another advantage in this respect. There is absolutely no side draft and no weight on the horses' necks, and two common horses can run the machine all day without more than ordinary fatigue. The cut—five feet wide—is clean, and every stalk is gathered in, there being absolutely no "slobbering." There is not a thread of canvas to shrink and swell with heat or wet, in fact the machine can be left standing in a down-pour of rain, and, as far as it is concerned, be used the moment the shower ceases.

The machine in question, which is the first one introduced into this county, is the joint purchase of Messrs. James Middleton and Wm. Swinton, who are both highly pleased with its simplicity and effectiveness. On Friday the latter was using it on a fine field of spring wheat, where it worked like a charm. On being asked how he liked the machine, he replied: "It just fills my eye; it's exactly what I've wanted this long time. I've got the best self-binder in the county"; and Mr. Middleton was equally warm in its praise. A few days ago, on his farm, he cut and bound forty acres in three days. Mr. Ward, travelling agent for Noxon Bros., and Mr. Saylor, of the works, and Mr. Alex. Davidson, whose farm lies over the way, were present; the latter also expressed his high approval of the "Low-down Binder."

Noxon Bros. only began the manufacture of this machine this season, and fifty of them are now in use.

Visit of the York Pioneers.

CORDIAL CORPORATE WELCOME ACCORDED.

Address and Reception—Driving the Town—Pioneering Memories of the Visitors.

On Tuesday at noon the first train, consisting of five coaches, having on board the first instalment of the excursion of the York Pioneers, of Toronto, arrived at the G. & Q. station. At 1.20 the second half of the party arrived in five more coaches. The party, which numbered about 600, was met at the station by Acting Mayor Rutherford (Mr. Cox being absent at Bourgeon Point), the members of the Council, a large number of leading citizens, the Fire Brigade and the Fire Brigade Band. The officers of the Society, who were Rev. Dr. Scadding, President; Wm. Rennie, 1st Vice-President; John Watson, Eli Crawford and John Smith, Vice-Presidents; W. H. Deal, Treasurer; R. Playter, Secretary; and Wm. Lee, Secretary of the Committee, were conducted to carriages provided by the Town Council. A procession, headed by the Fire Brigade Band, and composed of the Fire Brigade, Toulmin's band (accompanying the excursionists), and a line of fifteen or twenty carriages, proceeded to the Court House Park. The reception party and the Pioneers assembled in the pavillion. There were, besides, on the platform, Rev. J. W. Bateher, John Burnham, M.P., Joseph Walton, Dan. Boucher and Burritt, John McNaughton, ex-Councillor, and others.

Mr. Rutherford read the following

ADDRESS.

To the President and Members of the York Pioneers:

Gentlemen.—Upon this, probably the first visit of many of you to the town of Peterborough, we consider that it is but fit that you should be received in a proper and formal manner.

The very word pioneer is dear to many of the residents of this locality, and probably has more real significance to the people of this Canada of ours, than it has to the natives and early residents of any other country on the globe.

Although we cannot boast like the citizens of Toronto, of having celebrated our semi-centennial, still we fell confident that you will acknowledge that Peterborough stands to-day among the leading towns of the Dominion, and we fondly trust that the day is not far distant when it will be numbered among the cities.

In welcoming you to our inland town, we do so with the greatest cordiality, and we cannot but express our satisfaction at the feeling of preference you have shown by selecting Peterborough as the place for holding your annual gathering. We bid you a hearty welcome on behalf of our citizens of all classes and nationalities, and we trust that this is but the beginning of many visits that your noted body will pay to this section of the country.

We may say that until the last few years Peterborough has been comparatively unknown to what we may perhaps term the outside world, but now possessing as we do, direct railway communication with the Queen city, by both the Canada Pacific and Grand Trunk Railways, the two leading lines of Canada, we flatter ourselves that we are at last becoming known, and instead of being in the "backwoods" (that name dear to all real pioneers) we are fully as well, if not better situated than are our competitors on the frontier.

In conclusion we may say that it is with the greatest pleasure that we extend you a cordial welcome, and we fondly hope that you will carry away with you such pleasant recollections of our town, that you will at an early day again honor us with a visit.

C. D. McDONALD, Town Clerk. A. RUTHERFORD, Acting Mayor.

Rev. Dr. Scadding, President of the York Pioneers, read the following

REPLY.

Mr. Rutherford and Gentlemen of the Corporation of Peterborough:

We feel very thankful to you for the kind reception you have given us, and for making our short sojourn with you so pleasant. We shall carry away with us happy recollections of Peterborough and of our journey thither in the year 1884. Our Society, as you know, is mostly conversant with the past, but we do not fail to enter into and duly appreciate the present. Knowing so thoroughly, as many of us do, what was the wild physical condition of the greater part of our country fifty years ago, our amazement never ceases at what our eyes behold whenever we go abroad in our own excursions, let the direction be east, west, north or south. To-day, as we neared our destination, we passed along, I believe, by or through portions of Cavan, Emily, Ops, Mariposa and Monaghan. These are names which, in early days, were suggestive of places as much in the outskirts of civilization as are the names of townships along the north shore of Lake Huron. And what do we see brought about within only a part of a lifetime? We see here and everywhere else, outspread before us, an open, smiling, prosperous country, through the handiwork and persevering industry of the first settlers and their sons; the clearings have met and the Province of Ontario, throughout its length and breadth, presents an appearance approaching in rural beauty and excellence of cultivation that of old Eng., old Scotland and old Ireland.

We Pioneers, as an association exist, as you know, for the purpose of collecting, treasuring up, and from time to time recording all particulars, which may be deemed of interest in connection with the first beginning of settlements in the county of York as originally defined, and from habit and real fellow-feeling we like to dwell, as far as we may, on the first beginning of other places which we may have occasion to visit outside our jurisdiction. The long and intricate labyrinth of lakes and rivers on the line of which Peterborough stands is thus invested with a great charm to us and to most students of Canadian history. For, from time immemorial, that series of rivers and lakes formed one of the great watery highways for the aborigines in their traffic to and fro between the east and the west, between the extremities, on one side at least, and the heart of the continent of North America. In particular to the Toronto student of Canadian history is this route of primitive travel interesting; for, up the Trent, up the Otonabee and along through the net-work of the back lakes, was one of the well-frequented routes to and from the "Place of Meeting"; the chief rendez-vous of the large Huron population round the shores of Lake Simcoe, then known, and for the reason just implied, as Lake Toronto, whence the name of Toronto afterwards travelled south to the spot where it is now fixed.

Moreover, we cannot help associating the chain of interior communication on which Peterborough stands with the name and romantic history of Samuel Champlain, the founder of Quebec. He certainly passed along here, and may have encamped on this very spot, in 1613, when advancing from Cahiaguen, near Orillia, with a large war-party of Huron Indians, on his ill-fated expedition to the Iroquois territory across Lake Ontario.

But memories, of later date than Champlain, are started by the places seen and the familiar names heard to-day as we passed along. There are those amongst us who can recall from personal recollection, the Hon. Peter Robinson, for example, who in 1825 or just before, brought out under the auspices of the Home Government, the two thousand settlers from the south of Ireland, who peopled the townships around Peterborough. It was in allusion to him, as you know, that Peterborough was so named. Again the lakes and waters on the line of which Peterboro' stands, summon up in our memory the noble soldierly form of Sir John Colborne, who was the first of our lieut.-governors to order a scientific survey of the whole of the back lakes, with a view to establishing a water way for vessels of considerable draught, from the outlet of the Trent to Lake Huron, through Lake Simcoe, a project interrupted by political events, but which, if it had been carried fully into effect, would have been a priceless boon to the many naval and military and other families that had taken up land along the line of the expected improvement. For some years the county of Peterborough was known as the district of Colborne.

The names of several writers of considerable literary distinction are associated with Peterborough or its vicinity. Mayor Strickland and Mrs. Traill have produced books on Canada, which have proved works of more than a day. While answering as excellent immediate purpose, in furnishing the people of British Islands with accurate information in regard to this country at the time of their issue, these works are preserved now on account of their literary excellence, and are sought after by collectors for the admirable delineations which they contain of Canadian society in the old, homely primitive days. Major Strickland's volume entitled "Twenty-seven years in Canada West," published by Bentley in 1853, thus continues to be very interesting reading, and will probably be so regarded for many years to come.

Mrs. Traill's work, "The Backwoods of Canada," first published in Charles Knight's Library of Entertaining Knowledge, in 1836, is classic among connoisseurs of books on the subject of Canada and the United States. Its woodcut illustrations are permanent mental possessions with many. The concession line crossed through the pine forest, the log village, the arrival of the stage coach, the Rice ground and the long stretch of the Otonabee river; Peter the chief and the Indian papooses, will probably all be recalled without the aid of the book. The settler's log cabin as depicted in this book has served for a type of a settler's log cabin among contemporaneity. The [illegible] during the historical period of the Newcastle District, according to all of minutes discovering information, will also be represented.

But I am becoming prolix, which I resolved not to be. I will only carefully and more regretfully withdraw myself from your midst when I think of Peterborough, as I only think to be, as it was, prior to the present date, and to that when I was the guest of the Rev. Mr. Taylor. I often recall to mind Cobourg, Dundas, the [illegible] Academy, College, Dublin, as spoken of by Archbishop Whately, and Mr. Bidwell, the accomplished colonist and a skilful musician. I was indebted to him for a number of [illegible] acquaintance with two thousand words which afterwards proved of much value to me, as I am sure many Wyandot and Iroquois of Lorette and Caughnawaga will have kept the memory alive down to the present day. Another delightful [illegible] of the kind I have also come into my mind, for instance, Archdeacon Strachan. Did you ever hear him preach? If not, you have missed a treat. I should like to dilate on the many exciting topics of one who advocated true loyalty and valued it together at the old [illegible] of York.

The Pioneers, I am sure, have come to their home, so long adopted for in vain by the [illegible] inhabitants of our township, have come to their arms and embrace them, and with a smile of pleasure and appreciation which not even the [illegible] can efface, they will [illegible] and south, the railway now gives [illegible] to [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] will be [illegible] as an [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] must extend and grow with the [illegible] growth of every settlement, and there [illegible] length and breadth of our Dominion this [illegible] will surely largely help on that most [illegible] result, the blending of us all together as one people.

THE PIONEERS' PRESENT.

Mr. Lee, secretary of the committee, then presented the Town Council, on behalf of the Society, a handsomely framed photograph of a group of the members of the York Pioneers, to which Dr. Scadding added a copy of the by-laws and constitution.

Mr. Rutherford returned thanks for the gift, and assured the givers that it would be cherished as a memento and an object of the greatest interest.

Mr. John Burnham, M.P., having been called upon remarked that he had much pleasure in joining with the corporation in welcoming so venerable a body. The address of Dr. Scadding was very interesting and gave a great deal of information not generally known. He expressed hopes that at no distant day the schemes of Sir John Colbourne, in respect of our internal navigation, would be carried out in their entirety. It to be understood the York Pioneers, their object was to keep alive recollections of the deeds of the early settlers, and they did a good work in counteracting the Independence cry which a few misguided persons had raised. He heartily welcomed the venerable visitors to Peterborough.

Mr. Deal, Treasurer, returned thanks for the cordial reception the visitors had received. From the hospitality he had received at former visits he had expected such a welcome. He had attended the meetings of the Poultry Exhibition here. After an absence of two years he was greatly surprised at the immense growth of Peterborough, and predicted that ere long it would be a city.

Col. Burton, of Markham, then presented the Pioneers with an address on behalf of the descendents of the early settlers of Markham, which, Dr. Scadding said, would be duly replied to at the next meeting of the Pioneers.

DOING THE TOWN.

After dinner the members of the Council met the officers of the Pioneers at the Oriental Hotel, and the party proceeded down London street to the Dickson Estate Mills, then going down Race street, crossed the Hunter street bridge to Ashburnham. The party made a tour of the village, and then proceeding northward re-entered the town by the Smith street bridge. Passing Hazel Brae Home, the party visited Smithtown Hill, the view of the town from which the visitors greatly enjoyed. Passing down Reid street they returned to the hotel, and the tour was ended by a visit to Little Lake Cemetery, which Mr. Kelly had, as usual, in the best of order. The visitors were exceedingly warm in their praise of its beauty. The party then returned to the station and were sped on their way home, the first train leaving at 5 o'clock. The Pioneers were very lavish of their praises of the beauty of our streets, the briskness of the town and its many natural advantages for manufacturing operations. The condition of our streets was particularly praised, and there is no doubt that, aside from the duty of hospitality to so eminent a body, the attention paid the visitors, and the pains taken to show them the town, will be amply repaid by the good report they will make of the town of Peterborough.

A really well made corset warranted to give satisfaction, only fifty cents at Turnbull's.

3-Innings Match of the Fire Fiend

Three Business Places Destroyed on Hunter Street.

On Monday morning about four o'clock Mr. Wrighton noticed that the store rooms of Mr. Kingan's hardware were in flames, the match of the incendiary this time having been fatally efficient. The alarm was as once rung and the fire brigade turned out, but the flames were so far advanced that Mr. Kingan's premises could not be saved—they were burnt to the ground. The flames also swept westward, and also completly gutted the upper part of Mr. Joseph Griffin's boot and shoe store, and the second story of Mr. Chas. Harris' second hand store. The further progress of the fire was stayed by the brick wall between Harris' shop and Mr. Quinlan's grocery store. Willing hands saved a large amount of property. Mr. Kingan's stock consisting entirely of shelf hardware, was largely removed, but of course in a mixed condition that will greatly impair its value. However, $400 worth of bicycles and tricycles belonging to Mr. Frank Kingan were burned. These were protected by an insurance of $300. Mr. Griffin's stock was also largely saved except some valuable machinery in the second floor, the workshop. Mr. Harris had a great deal of his stock saved, but his loss which he says is $500, is complete, he having no insurance. At one time the rear of the stores of Messrs. A. Hall and J. D. Tully were in danger, and a branch from the George st. hydrant was turned on. A large part of the glass in Mr. Hall's windows was broken by heat and water, and so intense was the heat, the solder from the eaves and pipes dropped in seething drops to the ground. Mr. Kingan was well insured. He had an insurance of $1,000 on building and fixtures, in the Western; on the stock, $2,000 in the London and Lancashire; $2,000 in the Royal. Mr. Griffin had an insurance of $2,000 on his stock. His building and that of Mr. Harris, belonging to the Hall estate, were insured in the Lancashire for $1,500, which pretty well covers the loss. Mr. Kingan has resumed business in the shop next east of Hall, Innes & Co., Simcoe street. There is not the slightest reason to doubt that the fire was of incendiary origin.

Peterborough Cheese Board.

At the meeting of this board held on Tuesday, the same cheese was offered as at the previous meeting—about seven thousand boxes. The buyers were represented by Messrs. Clarkson, Flavelle of Lindsay, and Brower of Belleville. There was considerable bidding. Mr. Brower bid 8¾, 9¼, 10¾ and 10¾ cents for the balance of July, August, September, and October respectively. This offer was declined, and Mr. Clarkson bid for the same months, 9¾, 9¾, 10¾, and 11 cents. Mr. Brower followed with 9¾, 9¾, 11 and 11¼ cents. But all offers were declined and no transactions recorded. The cheese market is not lively; stocks are full, and [illegible] quotations show a decline from 52 shillings to 51 shillings. (Aug. 23th.)

A Note of Warning to Suffering Humanity.

We feel that we would be wanting in the duty we owe to humanity if we did not sound a note of warning in regard to the use of Mercury and other poisonous minerals in treatment of blood and skin diseases. If the reader could see the horrible suffering, the awful wrecks of human health and happiness shown by our correspondence with those who have been dosed with mineral poisons, he would shudder with horror. Arsenic, Mercury, Antimony, and Iodide of Potassium, are some of the remedies most ordinarily used for these diseases, and they are all POISON. Do not take these poisons. They might dry up your disease for a few days, but it will surely return, and with it you will have Mercurial Rheumatism which may bring you years of torture. Shaker Blood Syrup will invigorate you and build you up, and force all the poison out through the pores of your skin, and cure you sound and well.

SHAKER BLOOD SYRUP.

HER WONDERFUL DREAM OF A WEDDING.

Last Friday night a young lady in Denver dreamed that she saw a friend of hers play the important part of bride in a wedding. The phantom bride's dress was as plainly portrayed on the mental retina of the dreamer as if she had seen it with her waking eyes. The groom's appearance was equally distinct. Yesterday afternoon the dreamer met the bride's brother, and learned for the first time that her dream had pictured a fact. His sister had been privately married on the previous evening to a miner from Chihuahua, Mexico, and she wore the dress described. The visionary had no previous reason to suppose that the wedding would ever take place.

PETERBOROUGH BOARD OF HEALTH.

Vigorous Action Initiated.

On Thursday evening, Aug. 21st, a regular meeting of the Peterborough Board of Health was held with the following members present: Messrs. A. McNeil, Chairman, W. Paterson, jr., C. Stapleton, A. Rutherford, S. F. Allis, Dr. Clarke, Medical Health Officer, and Messrs. Pidgeon and Adams, Sanitary Inspectors.

After routine,

Accounts were presented from W. S. Cook's, painting notice boards, $2.50, and R. H. Adams, $2.50, digging trench near nuisance grounds.—Referred to Council for payment when certified to.

The Chairman referred to a complaint in reference to Matthew's Pork Packing establishment, and the matter was, on motion of Mr. Rutherford, seconded by Mr. Stapleton, referred to the Inspectors to examine and act as the law requires.

HEALTH OFFICER'S REPORT.

Dr. Clarke, Medical Officer, presented his report as follows:—

To the Chairman and Members of the Board of Health, Peterborough:

GENTLEMEN,—I beg leave to submit a fuller report of information received during a recent visit to Toronto than I was able to give you at the last meeting of the Board.

I found, in conversation with the Secretary of the Provincial Board, the City Health Officer and others, that very little progress had been made in the way of putting into effect the provisions of the Act, and I was desired to thank the Peterborough Board for their promptitude in organizing and thus setting a good example to other Provincial towns.

As to slaughter houses, the Provincial Secretary stated that the object of the Act is not to impose unnecessary hardship where care and cleanliness are observed, but that the law should be strictly enforced in cases of undoubted nuisance. Each Board must act for itself and in accordance with circumstances.

Regarding the disposal of excreta. In lieu of water closets connected with a system of sewerage, dry earth or ash closets are the most convenient and practicable form. I made extensive inquiries in regard to the working of these and found them all that could be wished for in the way of cleanliness, thorough disinfection and convenience. I brought down a number of circulars from a manufacturer whose closets are recommended by the Provincial Board, but since then I am happy to say that the manufacture of an excellent earth closet has been commenced in Peterborough. Mr. Clegg, furniture dealer, is making an automatic kind suitable either for use inside a house or that may be adapted to a vault. I have no doubt that these will be extensively used as soon as the attention of the public is directed to them. Those who cannot afford such, or for reasons prefer others, should use a closet similar to that known as the Hull closet system. A plan of this is given in a pamphlet issued by the Provincial Board, which appears in the report for 1882. This is very simple and answers every purpose. In the same pamphlet may be found the plan of a privy much used in the United States. This may be easily made by sawing a coal oil barrel in two and using one-half for the excrement, and the other for dry earth, or ashes. The cover of the seat, being movable, can be raised an a small quantity dusted on after use. It may be said that people will forget to do this, but in the ordinary water closet the act of raising the handle to remove the deposit is necessary, one can be done as easily as the other.

The dry earth closet, in some form or other, should be insisted upon in the more crowded parts of the town, particularly along George street, in the neighborhood of the stores. Any new privies that are being constructed should be on this plan—that is, of course, unless water closets are practicable. The rest of the town would soon fall in. The change could be made when the privies are emptied. In this way very little hardship would be imposed. It might also be noticed that the cost of the removal of the excreta would, or ought to be, very materially diminished. We hear complaints as to the charges made for emptying a privy under present circumstances. Under the dry earth system removal of the excretions would be no more offensive than the removal of the same quantity of gravel. Moreover, it could be done during the day. I am glad to say that there is a strong inclination on the part of the people to fall in with anything that will improve matters. A good many are using ashes or dust in the ordinary privy vault.

In connection with this subject may be noticed the question of sewerage. The adoption of a complete system for the town must sooner or later become a matter of paramount importance for the consideration of the Town Council. Being so wide in its bearings and involving so much expense considerable time will probably elapse before any measures are taken. Meanwhile I would strongly advise the construction of a large sewer along George street with which others could be connected as deemed expedient. The necessity for this is being evinced by occupants themselves as witness the large petition sent into the Council at a recent sitting. The drain along Hunter street is in a very unsatisfactory condition, the stench at McClelland's corner being sometimes intolerable. The Board of Health should lose no time in urging this matter on the Council.

Respecting wells. I have been analysing the water from a number af wells and find a large amount of impurities. In a town like Peterborough nothing else may be expected. With the utmost care in cleaning wells and removal of water closets from their vicinity, a time comes when the ground becomes saturated with decaying vegetable matter. In Toronto it was found necessary to close the wells, and we shall have to come to that before long.

I am glad to be able to report that no epidemic has appeared here this summer as yet. One case of typhoid fever, resulting fatally, has been reported. Thorough disinfection was used and no others have occurred. In the absence of other causes this case must have been due to impure drinking water.

Respecting reports from medical men, I would suggest the plan followed in Toronto, that of stamping the blanks sent out. This works well in Toronto. Very few cases of infectious disease are not reported.

Regarding the sanitary condition of houses, careful inspection is being constantly made, and in the event of nuisances not being removed, proceedings have been entered.

There is another important question on which a word may be said here. I refer to the presence of large quantities of sawdust in the river and lake. The highest authorities have judged this as deleterious to health, from the amount of noxious gases generated. This is a matter which should be taken up by the Provincial Board, as the nuisance exists in various parts of the Province. Mention should be made of it in the first report to the Board. While on the question of noxious gases, a word may also be said about Spaulding's Bay. The sooner this town nuisance is done away with the better. I have been given to understand that the establishment of the O. & Q. station and the necessity for room will soon lead to its being filled up, a consummation devoutly to be wished.

J. CLARKE, M.D.,
Medical Health Officer.

Peterborough, Aug. 21, 1884.

The report was adopted and the Secretary instructed to transmit the clauses relating to sewerage to the Town Council.

Mr. Stapleton moved, seconded by Mr. Paterson, that in view of the Medical Health Officer having condemned the present police cells, as an unfit place to detain prisoners in, that the Council be ordered to secure a fit and proper place at one, and if such is not done legal proceedings will be taken.—Carried.

On motion of Mr. Rutherford, seconded by Mr. Stapleton, the Inspectors were authorized to have the drain on Hunter street closed up, unless parties interested put the same in proper sanitary condition, the same to be done within one week from date of notice.

On motion of Mr. Stapleton, seconded by Mr. Allin, the Inspectors were instructed to recommended the dry earth closet system, as approved of by the Medical Health Officer, to be used within the corporation.

On motion of Mr. Stapleton, seconded by Mr. Paterson, Messrs. Hilliard, Clarke and McNeil were appointed a delegation to wait upon the Council to urge the necessity of a system of sewerage for the town.

On motion of Mr. Paterson, seconded by Mr. Stapleton, the Secretary was instructed to notify the Provincial Secretary respecting the nuisances of the "Geese Pond," Spauldings Bay, and the sawdust in the Little Lake, the sewers and other offensive matters.

The Board adjourned to meet at the call of the Chairman.

From Dixie's Sunny Land.

Forepaugh has engaged a troupe of twelve colored men and women, formerly slaves, who travel with his show, appearing in the street parade, where they represent a scene from life "way down in Dixie." The party personate a group of colored people coming into town to sell cotton, and the appearance of the rope-harnessed, mule-drawn wagon, with its joyous-faced, singing and shouting occupants, furnishes an interesting picture of Southern life. It will be seen here in the Forepaugh parade on Monday, Sept. 15.

Mr. R. A. Harrison, Chemist and Druggist, Dunnville, Ont., writes: "I can with confidence recommend Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyspeptic Cure for Dyspepsia, Impure Blood, Pimples on the Face, Biliousness and constipation—such cases having come under my personal observation."

To the Medical Profession and Sufferers from Catarrh, Catarrhal Deafness, Asthma, Bronchitis, Weak Lungs and Consumption.

My motive is not one of money only, but for science and the good of suffering humanity.

To convince the public and prove to the sceptical that the Spirometer is the best instrument ever invented for the treatment of diseases of the air passages, and that it is all I have ever claimed for it, anyone suffering from the above named diseases who call at the Caisse House on Saturday or Sunday, Sept 6 or 7 and consult the surgeons of the International Throat and Lung Institute, will be given a Spirometer free, the medicines alone to be paid for. I do this to show the confidence I have in the treatment, and to convince the medical profession and others who are still sceptical (notwithstanding the thousands of people who have been cured by it, that the Spirometer I have invented and the medicines and treatment prescribed by the surgeons of the International Throat and Lung Institute are curing and will cure a larger percentage of these diseases than any other treatment in the world.

If impossible to call upon the surgeons during their visit to your city, write for International News and List of Questions.

AN INVITATION TO DINNER.

The story is told that the playing of a celebrated violinist very much impressed one of the ladies of the audience, a well known society leader, and she caused the musician to be presented to her.

"I was delighted with your wonderful music, Mr. S.," the lady said; "quite carried away with it in fact."

The musician was charmed.

"If you have no other engagements for Thursday evening," the lady went on, "I would be pleased to have you dine with us."

He had no other engagements.

"And be sure and bring your violin," she added.

"Well, madam," Mr. S. replied, "I hardly think that will be necessary; my violin never gets hungry."

Mrs. Barnhart, cor. Pratt and Broadway, has been a sufferer for twelve years through rheumatism, and has tried every remedy she could hear of, but received no benefit until she tried Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil: she says she cannot express the satisfaction she feels at having her pain entirely removed and her rheumatism cured. There are base imitations of this medicine for sale; see that you get Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil.

THE QUACK OF A GOOSE.

"How is my little duck to-night?" asked young Crimsonbeak of Miss Fussanfeather, his fiancee, as she met him at the door the other evening.

"Oh, I'm nearly roasted, George," exclaimed the petulant maiden.

"I'm so glad," came from the lover with a serene smile.

"Glad!" cried the girl, preparing to take a bath in tears; "you heartless creature!"

"Yes," said George, in a low voice, after he had turned out the gas and put the clock back one hour; "you see, I am passionately fond of roast duck."

Great results are speedily accomplished by the leading alterative, Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyspeptic Cure. Indigestion ceases, biliousness disappears, constipation gives place to regularity of the bowels in consequence of taking it. Ladies suffering from complaints peculiar to their sex experience long wished for relief from it, and impurities in the circulation no longer trouble those who have sought its aid. Give it a trial and you will not regret it.

INVISIBLE INK FOR POSTAL CARDS.

Diluted sulphuric acid—one part, by measure, of acid to seven parts of water. When this ink is used the card will at first show roughened traces of the writing, but after being allowed to dry for a short time these disappear, and it is as invisible as if done with water. Of coarse, only a gold pen or a quill must be used. If it is desired to avoid the suspicion of using sympathetic ink, which might be excited by a blank postal card, it may be written upon across the first writing with the tincture of iodine, which will entirely fade out when the heat is applied to develop the invisible ink.

JOHN DRYDEN, M.P.P., ON THE "NEW MODEL."

(From the Ontario Reformer, December 21st, 1883.)

Our readers are, probably, all aware that Mr. Dryden, M. P. P., President of the Canadian Shorthorn Breeders' Association, occupies one of the finest farms in the Dominion of Canada, and is one of the best farmers. He cultivates something over five hundred acres of land, and there is scarcely an acre but what is in a high state of cultivation, and the whole farm is free from all weeds or plants which are injurious to crops. Not only does he own one of the finest and best tilled farms in the country, but his stock throughout, whether horses, cattle, or sheep, are of the very best breeds, and all of them fine animals. In every Department Mr. Dryden looks out for the best, whether it is in the line of stock, machinery, or seed grains. He and his neighbor, Mr. Samuel Holman, purchased for their own use, this year, a New Model Vibrating Threshing Machine of the Hall Company, and Mr. Dryden's opinion we give below. Every one who is acquainted with him knows that he would not put his name to any statement which is not correct in every particular; therefore his opinion of the New Model is of great value to those who desire to purchase a threshing machine:—

BROOKLIN, Ontario County, Dec. 13th, 1883

The Joseph Hall Manufacturing Co., Oshawa:

GENTLEMEN,—We are highly delighted with the 10-Horse-Power and New Model Vibrator purchased from you this season. It runs smooth and easy; threshes perfectly; separates thoroughly; and the fanning mill does its work so completely that it cannot be excelled. It is just the machine for the farmers to buy because it is so easy to control. It is comparatively free from dust, there can be no waste of grain, and it is so bound to do good work under every circumstance. We heartily congratulate you on the introduction of so complete a separator, a great boon both to threshers and farmers. Very truly yours

JOHN DRYDEN, M.P.P.,
SAMUEL HOLMAN.

An Interesting Test.

From the London Advertiser.

The Joseph Hall Manufacturing Company, Oshawa, have introduced a new threshing machine called the "New Model" Vibrator. This Machine was invented by Mr. Jacob Miller, of Canton, Ohio, who has for forty years been engaged in manufacturing threshing machines. The "New Model" was first offered to the public in 1879. For 1883 more than one thousand were sold in the United States. The Hall Company have been making some very interesting tests to ascertain the real merits of the machine as a grain saver. A platform was built at the rear of the machine with a slatted bottom, so that all the grain fell upon the slats. It was arranged so that one man could stand on either side of the platform and shake the grain out of the straw, so as to allow it to fall through the slats, throwing the straw over on the ground. A hopper was placed under the platform, and under the hopper a fanning mill was placed. Then fifty bushels of grain was threshed, beginning at the rate of sixty bushels per hour, and working up to one hundred and twenty bushels per hour. After threshing fifty bushels at each of the various speeds, the grain in the fanning mill was cleaned up and weighed. It can be readily seen that in this way a test can be made which would indicate exactly the quantity of grain which would be liable to go into the straw stack. Ten tests were made only a short time ago, and the worst result was the loss of five ounces of wheat in threshing two bushels, which was equal to a waste of one bushel in nineteen hundred and twenty. This is a truely wonderful result, and is valuable because the test has been made in a thorough and systematic manner. All kinds of grain have been tested, and the result was equally satisfactory.

CHANTRY, OCTOBER 14th, 1882.

The Joseph Hall Manufacturing Company, Oshawa.

GENTLEMAN,—I have got the "New Model" Vibrator fairly at work and it is doing better and better work every day. It feeds easier than the other style of machine, and is a perfect cleaner, does not throw over any and is more durable than any other. As you know, I have had forty years' experience in threshing machines, having bought one of the first machines that came into Canada from the late Joseph Hall, at Rochester, and have been a continuous thresher ever since. There is no better machine made than the "New Model."

Yours truly, E. W. SHELDON.

Important Letter From an Ops Farmer.

Forty Bushels of Cleaned Barley Saved From Re-threshed Straw.

Ops, February 18th 1883.

To the Editor of the Canadian Post:

SIR,—Please allow me space in your valuable paper to make the following statement which I know will be of interest to all my farmer friends who read your journal. I employed a threshing machine to thresh my grain on the 26th day of January. It was manufactured by J. Abell, of Woodbridge. On February 6th I employed Messrs. Wetherup & Curtis to finish my threshing with a "New Model" Vibrating threshing machine, manufactured by the Jos. Hall Manufacturing Co., of Oshawa.

Messrs. Wetherup & Curtis re-threshed part of the straw and chaff threshed by the Woodbridge machine, and took therefrom thirty bushels of clean barley.

The "New Model" Vibrator is the most perfect thresher, seperator, and cleaner I ever saw.

Yours very respectfully,
DAVID GRAY,
2nd Con. of Ops.

Elgin County.

It has no Equal in the County of Elgin.

From the Ontario Reformer, Sept. 28th 1883.

The success of the New Model Thresher has been without precedent in the history of threshing machines. The Hall Co. received this week the following letter from Mr. Jonathan Yorke, who resides near St. Thomas, one of the oldest threshermen in Ontario. Mr. Yorke bought a New Model on trial, and this letter expresses his opinion after having tested the machine to his entire satisfaction:—

YARMOUTH CENTRE, Sept. 23rd, 1883.

Joseph Hall Manufacturing Co., Oshawa, Ont:

GENTLEMEN,—I have one of your New Model Vibrators and have threshed this season so far with it. The farmers I have threshed for all say it is the best threshing machine that ever came into their barn. It has no equal in the county of Elgin. I have threshed for thirty-seven years and have used most all other kinds of machines, but this lays them all out for good threshing, separating, and cleaning. The wheat is shrunk here, but it will thresh all the grain out of the heads and separate it from the straw and clean it better than any machine I ever saw. It does not scatter the grain all around the hind part of the machine, so when you get the straw threshed you are done. It does not take half an hour to clean up the floor after you have finished the mow. It does not wind in threshing peas or other grain it stands still on the floor and no belts fly off to bother you. I would advise any man who wants to buy a threshing machine not to buy any other kind, and I am sure when he tries one he will be satisfied that he has got the boss of them all.

Yours truly, JONATHAN YORKE.

Never Saw a Threshing Machine as Nearly perfect as the "New Model."

COOKSVILLE, Dec. 30th, 1882.

To the Editor of the Express, Oakville:

DEAR SIR,—We, the undersigned farmers and old threshers, being desirous of advancing the interests of our farmer friends, take great pleasure in calling their attention to a new threshing machine which we have had the satisfaction of seeing work. It is called the "New Model" Vibrator, and was made by the Joseph Hall Manufacturing Co., of Oshawa. We have had much experience in threshing, separating, and cleaning grain, but we have never seen a threshing machine so nearly perfect as the "New Model." It runs very smoothly, with scarcely any vibration, every part being so carefully and evenly balanced. It threshes rapidly; in fact it can take all the straw men can give it. It feeds very easily. It separates the grain most thoroughly from the straw; in this respect it is remarkable. And, finally, it cleans the grain more perfectly than we have ever seen it done heretofore. The manufacturers claim that it will thresh two thousand bushels of wheat without wasting more than a bushel, and we believe that the machine will fulfil their claim in this respect. We believe there is no machine offered to the public in Canada which so fully meets the demand for a perfect thresher, separator, and cleaner.

PETER BURNS, SAMUEL PRICE,
JAMES WALKER, S. H. PRICE.

A Great Step in Advance of other Machines.

TAUNTON, Dec. 12th 1883

The Joseph Hall Manufacturing Company, Oshawa:

GENTLEMEN,—We have now thoroughly tested our New Model Vibrator and Ten Horse Pitts' Power which we purchased of you during the season, and are pleased to say that it gives us unqualified satisfaction. It threshes the grain out of the straw completely and saves every kernel of it more successfully than any other machine we have ever seen or used. It cleans the grain almost fit for market. In this respect it is surprisingly ahead of all other threshers and cleaners. It is light on the horses; does not get out of order; easily managed; and in all respects is a great step in advance of other machines. You are at liberty to refer any one to us who desires to know our opinion of the New Model. We purchased the machine almost entirely for the use of ourselves and a few neighbours, and are well pleased with our purchase.

Yours truly
WILLIAM LANDER,
JOHN LANDER.

The "New Model" Vibrator Thresher.

MARIPOSA, Sept. 29th 1883.

Joseph Hall Manufacturing Co., Oshawa:

GENTS,—The "New Model" Vibrator I bought from you through your agent, E. Walker, is the best thresher I have ever used. I have been threshing over thirty years; have had eight threshing machines before, but the "New Model" is the best I ever have handled. The farmers I threshed for fairly admire the working of the machine; to see the complete separation of the grain from the straw, cleaning it fit for market, and taking all the small grain out at the same time. I have no hesitation in saying that there is nothing can equal it.

Yours truly,
RICHARD MARNS.

ST. MARY'S, Dec. 13th, 1883.

E. O. Fell, General Agent Jos. Hall Manufacturing Co., London:

DEAR SIR,—The New Model Thresher and Oshawa Engine which we bought from your agent, Jno. Fitzsimmons, is all that you claim for it. The farmers are surprised at the way she cleans the grain. No necessity for a fanning mill while she is around. We can truly and honestly endorse the statement which other threshermen have sent you. Words fail to express our surprise at the work she does, she cannot be beat. We have used a number of machines and consider the "New Model" ahead of them all, and would recommend intending purchasers to examine the "Model" before purchasing. Yours truly,

JOHN LANE,
JAMES MOORE.

"It Takes Splendidly Around Here—It Fans the Grain So Clean that it is Really Fit for Market."

MILVERTON, Feb. 12th, 1883.

Editor Stratford Beacon:

RESPECTED SIR,—Please allow me a little space in your valuable paper to inform my farmer friends as to a new threshing machine which I have lately purchased called the "New Model" Vibrator, made at the Hall Works in Oshawa. I have tested it this winter, and desire to say that it is, without doubt, the very best machine I have seen. It takes splendidly around here. It fans the grain so clean that it is really fit for market. I never saw anything like it. It threshes and separates beyond my expectations. The waste of grain is reduced to the lowest possible point; in fact, does not amount to anything. It is the greatest grain saver I have ever seen; threshes rapidly, is easy on the horses, runs very steadily, all the parts being perfectly balanced, and I see nothing in it to get out of order, or to wear out. I have had a good deal of experience in threshing machines, and say, without the least hesitation, that the "New Model" Vibrator is the best thresher, separator and cleaner made in the country. The machine is well made and well finished. Thanking you for the opportunity of informing my farmer friends of the merits of this machine, I am, Sir, yours truly,

WM. COXON.

ONTARIO COUNTY.

No Winding. No Choking, and no Grain Carried Over with the "New Model."

GREENBACK, Township Reach,
Oct. 26th, 1883.

To the Joseph Hall Manufacturing Company:

GENTS,—In regard to the 33-inch "New Model" Separator and 10 Horse Down Pitts Power, which I purchased of you in July, I beg to say that as a thresher, separator, and saver of grain, nothing can beat it. I have been threshing for the past twelve years, and this is the best machine I have ever used. It gives great satisfaction to all my customers. I have fifty days work ahead yet, and have been threshing steadily ever since I took the machine from your shop. There has been a great deal of damp grain this year, which has made threshing hard work, but the "New Model" has given such great satisfaction that it has been a pleasure to thresh. No winding, no choking, no waste of grain, and the grain has been cleaned fit for market. There is no machine equal to the "New Model" that I know of.

Yours truly, GEORGE O'LEARY.

TO THE FARMERS AND THRESHERMEN OF CANADA.

Our New Model Vibrating Threshing Machine has now been in use in the United States four seasons and in Canada three seasons. As a perfect grain thresher, separator, and cleaner, it stands without a rival on this continent. No less than 1,200 machines were sold in the U. S. last season. We have now a very large force of men employed and can turn out three or four threshing machines per day. Also engines, horse-powers, clover threshers, &c., &c.

We invite any and all parties who may desire a threshing machine to inspect the New Model Vibrator, or send for our descriptive catalogue which will give full information. We guarantee that every machine we send out will give entire satisfaction or we will return the notes or cash which may have been given us for the same.

The Banner Week

FOR

SILKS

Giroux & Sullivan sold during last week, more silks than all the other houses combined. Since they placed on sale the 22 inch Black Silk at 75 cents per yard, which is equal to any offered elsewhere at $1.00, the sales have been immense. Their large and well lighted Silk Department has been thronged with eager buyers, all declaring their goods to be the best value ever offered in Peterborough, notwithstanding the exaggerated advertisements of other houses, who cannot buy them as low as the retail price here.

Where these Silks are procured, or why they are sold so cheap is no affair of the customers. It is enough for them to know that they can buy here about 25 per cent less than the pervading prices throughout the town. Do not fail to ask for our Summer Silks at 42½c., 45c., 50c., 60c., and 75c. See our Black Dress Silks at $1.00, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75 $2.00, $2.25, $2.50, warranted pure silk both filling and warp. They are heavy in texture beautiful in finish and quality, surpassing anything in the town at 25 per cent. higher in price. Don't fail to see them at

FORTUNE HUNTING.

"So you've really engaged yourself to be married, my love?"

"Yes, Mrs. Townsend."

Francesca Vere looked up a little defiantly into the quiet, elderly face of the lady who sat opposite her. Just nineteen, with soft hair, touched with sunny gold; eyes of the deepest blue, and a fair, oval face, bright with the velvety bloom of early youth, she was the very incarnation and embodiment of happy maidenhood, as she stood leaning against the window, her dress of blue cashmere sweeping the velvet carpet, and a mist-like shawl of white Shetland wool drooping from her shoulders. An orphan and an heiress, endowed, moreover, with the rare gift of beauty, it is not strange if Francesca was a little spoiled, yet something very sweet and winning in her very willfulness.

"And to Fiske Egerton?" went on Mrs. Townsend, gravely.

"Yes, to Fiske Egerton," Francesca answered, playing a little nervously with the fringe of her shawl, while a deeper color crept into her cheek.

"My dear, you are doing a very serious thing!"

"Yes, ma'am, I know it; but it's a way girls have of getting engaged and married!" Francesca said, with an arch glance at her mentor.

"Francesca, you mustn't jest about this matter," said Mrs. Townsend, earnestly. "I am your mother's earliest friend, and, as such, I feel it at once a duty and a privilege to counsel you at this most important stage of your life. Tell me about this fiance of yours."

"He is very handsome, very stylish, very agreeable," said Francesca, eagerly.

"Is he rich?"

"No; but, pardon me, I know what you would say. He is no fortune-hunter; he loves me for myself alone!"

She had flushed crimson as she spoke.

"I hope you are right, my love," said Mrs. Townsend; "but, to tell you the truth, I have heard less favorable accounts of this young man."

"Then you have listened to the false charges of some envious enemy," interrupted Francesca, with sparkling eyes; "please do not repeat them to me. I could not bear them calmly, even from you, dear Mrs. Townsend, knowing, as I do, their utter untruth!"

And good Mrs. Townsend took her leave, pondering rather sadly to herself upon the impossibility of putting old heads upon young shoulders, while Francesca sat down in the shadows of the satin window-curtains to dream of the bright future before her, and to assure herself, over and over again, of her blessedness in being the recipient of Fiske Egerton's love.

Meanwhile the last engagement upon the tapis of fashionable life was being discussed in the reading room of a popular Fifth avenue club.

"Egerton engaged to marry Miss Vere! Nonsense—there's not a word of truth in it!" exclaimed Harry Morton, indignantly, as the floating on dit reached his ears.

"But I tell you it is true, for I myself saw the engagement diamond on her finger, and Fiske told me so!"

"Then all I have to say is that he is a great scamp!"

"I don't doubt the fact at all," laughed the companion; "but, nevertheless, he has made a good thing out of it this season. Francesca is the richest girl out, and a pretty one in the bargain!"

As Harry Morton stood gazing out of the club window at the gayly-dressed throng of pedestrians that flowed to and fro, like contending currents on the pavements below, his thoughts were far away, beneath the rose-garlanded eaves of an old farm-house, in the golden glow of the summer that was gone, where a dark-eyed girl was watching the windings of the road with feverish impatience, watching for Fiske Egerton's coming presence, while he, the true lover of Elfrida, the earnest, deep hearted suitor, was utterly slighted and forgotten.

"Can he have broken with my cousin Elfrida?" he thought; "and so soon? I will go down to Willow Hill and discover for myself!"

The western windows of the old farm-house at Willow Hill were all ablaze with the dying glow of the chill winter sunset when Harry Morton arrived at his uncle's house. Elfrida was sitting by the fireside, her face paler than of old, and an expression almost akin to despair in the melting black eyes, whose beauty gave a dark Spanish beauty to her whole face.

"Elfrida," he said, embracing the first opportunity of being alone with her, "when have you heard from Egerton?"

"Not in some time. I suppose he is very busy!"

"Very, indeed, I have no doubt." Morton's lips curled ironically. "So your engagement is broken off."

"Broken off! Never!"

Elfrida's flushed cheek grew pale as ashes.

"You don't mean to say that he is still your plighted lover?"

"Certainly he is!"

"My poor Elfrida, do you not know that he is engaged to marry the richest heiress of the season in New York?"

"I do not believe it! Oh, Harry, Harry, beware how you deceive me!" wailed Elfrida; "it is not true—it never can be true."

"His engagement ring sparkles upon her finger; he is her constant cavalier; it is the talk of the whole city! Oh, Elfrida, do not look so white and agonized—he was never worthy of your love!"

"Stop a minute, Harry," said the girl, passing her hand, in a bewildered sort of way, across her forehead. "Let me realize what you are telling me. Fiske Egerton is a villain. I am deserted for one who bears the magic wand of wealth. And she?"

"She is one of the sweetest girls I ever knew—worthy to be a monarch's bride."

"Then she don't know——"

"Of this previous love-making of this precious swain. Of course she does not know it. Francesca Vere is too noble and true-hearted a girl to accept her happiness at the cost of another's blighted life."

"She must be undeceived, Harry. When do you return to the city?"

"To-morrow."

"I will go with you, my friend. Mrs. Clare will gladly receive me for a day or two."

"It shall be as you wish, Elfrida."

And Harry Morton asked no further questions on the subject, although he could readily conjecture what was in her mind.

Miss Vere was surprised, a day or two afterward, to receive a visit from her friend, Mrs. Clare, accompanied by a tall, slender young lady, whose dark eyes seemed to glow beneath her veil like two coals of fire.

"Miss Dale was anxious to make your acquaintance, Francesca," said Mrs. Clare, after she had introduced the stranger; "so I ventured to bring her with me."

Francesca held out her soft white hand with a smile of welcome and one or two gracious words, but Elfrida merely inclined her head.

"Miss Vere," she said abruptly, "is the rumor true that you are engaged to be married to Mr. Fiske Egerton?"

Miss Vere looked astonished, but she answered in the affirmative.

"Excuse me," said Elfrida, with a hard, bitter laugh, "but I am an unsophisticated little country girl. How many ladies is it allowable for New York gentleman to be engaged to at the same time?"

"I do not understand you," Francesca said, growing scarlet and then pale.

"Because," added Miss Dale, Mr. Egerton has been my affianced husband for the last two months!"

Francesca glanced involuntarily down at the diamond glittering on her forefinger. Miss Dale saw the movement of her eye, and drawing off her own glove held up a slender finger circled by a plain band of gold, where a ruby glowed like a crystalized drop of blood.

"I, too, have an engagement ring," she said bitterly. "Look!"

She drew it off, and on the under side Miss Vere could read in tiny engraven characters: "Fiske Egerton to Elfrida Dale, July 4, 18—"

"I can show you his letters, too," added Elfrida. "I brought them to the city with me lest this ring and my unaided word should scarcely prove strong enough testimony."

"It is enough!" Francesca's voice sounded strangely hard and metallic. "You need say no more."

"Nay," interrupted Elfrida Dale, more softly; "it was not to break your heart that I unveiled the character of the man we have both been rash enough to love, but rather to save you from a fate too terrible to contemplate—marriage to a false-hearted villain! We are sufferers together, Miss Vere; let me take your hand in mine!"

Francesca clasped the proffered palm in her own, and drawing Elfrida Dale close to her kissed her lips. Sorrow had indeed made them sisters.

"Do not go," she said. "Stay here yet a little while."

"What are you going to do?"

"I have sent for Mr. Egerton to come here at once. Do you dread meeting him?"

"Only as I would dread contact with a loathsome reptile or a deadly viper. Love in my heart has died out, utterly and entirely."

Francesca's lip quivered slightly.

"You are brave. Perhaps I, too, shall learn the lesson in time."

Mrs. Clare looked on at the strange scene being enacted before her, scarcely able to believe but that it was a dream. Presently the servant advanced noiselessly into the room, and announced in a voice hardly above his breath:

"Mr. Egerton!"

And Fiske Egerton followed him, a tall, handsome young man, with a conceited way of carrying his head and a confident air, as if quite certain of the irresistibility of his own charms.

"Francesca, my darling, you sent for me," he said, bending over her hand.

"Yes, I sent for you!"

Mr. Egerton looked expectant.

"An old friend of yours is visiting us. I wished you to meet her face to face."

She motioned to Elfrida to advance, and the next moment Mr. Fiske Egerton stood confronted with the girl whom he had so heartlessly jilted for a more advantageous match.

"Elfrida Dale!" He grew pale as a sheet of white paper. "What on earth brings you here?"

"The determination to expose you!" Elfrida answered, calm as a statue, while a slight scornful curve rested momentarily on her upper lip. "You are unmasked, Fiske Egerton! Hereafter, have the goodness to remember that it is not always safe to play a double game!"

"Francesca!" exclaimed Egerton, turning to the heiress, as if determined to cling to the last straw of hope. But she drew haughtily back.

"No more Francesca to you, if you please, Mr. Egerton. Leave my presence, and never let me look upon your face again."

And that was the end of Mr. Fiske Egerton's finely-woven web of falsehood and duplicity. The heiress was lost irretrievably and forever.

Elfrida Dale became happy once again as the beloved and cherished wife of Harry Morton, and in the course of time Francesca Vere wedded a suitor for anything of her love than the handsome, heartless perfume-hunter; but Mr. Fiske Egerton is still a seedy, shabby gentleman about town, hoping against hope that some day he may marry rich.

Didn't Like the Suggestion.

"My dear," remarked a Central avenue young man to his best girl, "I see by the papers that a girl in Baltimore has reduced the size of her mouth considerably by whistling."

"That is singular, isn't it, George?" replied the girl.

"Yes, and it is said that after a few months' practice a four-inch mouth could be reduced to two inches and a half."

"O my, how queer!"

"Yes, dear, and I thought it would improve your looks if you were to try it."

"You horrid thing! I'll never speak to you again—so there!"

And that engagement is postponed.

Dr. Eberhardt is exceedingly fond of a joke. The other night he determined to scare his boys, who were up town, out of their wits when they came home. So he took a big board out on the piazza, and with a stick of phosphorus drew a fiery coffin on the board, with a devil in it, after the manner of the K. K. K. He became absorbed in his work and neglected to watch his phosphorus, and the first thing he knew it ignited and before he could let it loose the skin was burned off the fingers of his right hand.—*Hartwell (Ga.) WARREN LELAND, whom everybody knows as the successful manager of the Largest Hotel Enterprises

of America, says that while a passenger from New York on board a ship going around Cape Horn, in the early days of emigration to California, he learned that one of the officers of the vessel had cured himself, during the voyage, of an obstinate disease by the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Since then Mr. LELAND has recommended AYER'S SARSAPARILLA in many similar cases, and he has never yet heard of its failure to effect a radical cure.

Some years ago one of Mr. LELAND'S farm laborers bruised his leg. Owing to the bad state of his blood, an ugly scrofulous swelling or lump appeared on the injured limb. Horrible itching of the skin, with burning and darting pains through the lump, made life almost intolerable. The leg became enormously enlarged, and running ulcers formed, discharging great quantities of extremely offensive matter. No treatment was of any avail until the man, by Mr. LELAND'S direction, was supplied with AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, which allayed the pain and irritation, healed the sores, removed the swelling, and completely restored the limb to use.

Mr. LELAND has personally used

for Rheumatism, with entire success; and, after careful observation, declares that, in his belief, there is no medicine in the world equal to it for the cure of Liver Disorders, Gout, the effects of high living, Salt Rheum, Sores, Eruptions, and all the various forms of blood diseases.

We have Mr. LELAND'S permission to invite all who may desire further evidence in regard to the extraordinary curative powers of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA to see him personally either at his mammoth Ocean Hotel, Long Branch, or at the popular Leland Hotel, Broadway, 27th and 28th Streets, New York.

Mr. LELAND'S extensive knowledge of the good done by this unequalled eradicator of blood poisons enables him to give inquirers much valuable information.

PETERBOROUGH, AUGUST 28, 1884.

The Mowat Reception.

By the spirit with which Reformers enter into the grateful task of giving Hon. Mr. Mowat an enthusiastic reception on his return home from England, it may be confidently predicted that the demonstration to be held on Sep. 16th, will be a most imposing and successful one. The programme will be as follows:

Mr. Mowat will, it is expected, arrive at Niagara on Sept. 15th. He will at that time be met by a deputation of his personal and political friends from Toronto and other places. On the following morning, Tuesday Sept. 16th, Mr. Mowat and party will take the train for Hamilton, where he will be met by a large deputation and be the recepient of a cordial welcome. A special train, and two if necessary, will leave for Toronto at about 10 o'clock. The Premier and party will arrive at the Union station at 11:30. A procession will be formed, which will proceed by way of King and Yonge streets to Queen's Park, where addresses will be presented to Mr. Mowat, and a huge mass meeting addressed.

In the evening a grand banquet will be given to Hon. Mr. Mowat in the pavilion of the Horticultural gardens. The price of tickets to this banquet will be two dollars.

It is expected that Reform Associations throughout the province will co-operate by sending delegates. To the Reformers of this riding we would say that it is desirable that it be well represented. A supply of badges have been provided for those taking part in the demonstration. Those desiring badges or banquet tickets are requested to send their names as soon as possible to the president of the Reform Association, Mr. T. G. Hazlett, or to Mr. J. R. Stratton, secretary, EXAMINER office, so that badges and tickets may be obtained from Toronto. Parties should make application not later than the first week in September. Gentlemen in the East Riding who may not find it convenient to apply to the president or secretary of the East Riding Association, Messrs. A. R. Kidd and J. M. Drummond, may leave their names at THE EXAMINER office, and they will be forwarded to these gentlemen.

Peterborough's Prosperity.

We have in a previous issue of the Examiner made mention of several things which will conduce greatly to Peterborough's prosperity.

Among other felt wants we have instanced an increase in her manufactories and industries as being most desirable.

We have also indicated how immediate action might secure for Peterborough the trade of the country recently brought within our reach by the opening of the Canada Pacific Railway.

And we have shown how the amalgamation of Ashburnham with our town would be advantageous to our joint interests and might hasten the incorporation of Peterborough as a city.

These are all live questions, matters indeed which closely affect the importance, the well-being and the growth of Peterborough.

Each of these points demands the attention of our council and citizens. They should receive full, careful and immediate consideration.

In whatever way the interests of the town can be advanced, whatever practical plans can be proposed to further our growth as a city, increase our trade, extend our business facilities and add to our population, should be heartily and earnestly supported.

To take our last proposal first. How can the annexation of Ashburnham with our own corporation be furthered? Not we are convinced, by apathy and neglect on the part of our town fathers. Nor by the illiberal and stupid policy which leaves our own streets in a dilapidated condition, and neglects the most ordinary precautions for the well being of our own citizens.

Contrasts have frequently been drawn between the condition of the streets and side walks in our leading throughfares, and those in the neighbouring village. The comparison has, to say the least of it, reflected little credit on the larger corporation.

Lately we have been visited by a few daring burglars, and some of our citizens have lost heavily. Thistle Ward has not been unknown among us. In consequence of these things, the public mind has been unsettled and alarmed. Has the council taken immediate steps to protect the lives and property of the people by the appointment of night watchmen? Are the very best efforts of our civic fathers put forth to hinder devastation by fire? These are practical matters. If we would induce others to join us and form one corporation, we must shew we are better governed and better protected, and that the privileges and advantages of union are manifest and decided.

There are other matters which pertain closely to Peterborough's prosperity, which also deserve attention. The public park question has probably, in the estimation of some of our readers, been discussed ad nauseam. Nevertheless it is important, and should command a greater share of consideration than has yet been devoted to it.

In a few brief years, when property has greatly risen in price, it will be too late to secure any one of the most desirable and available sites. These will have been secured for other purposes, and the council will then deplore the apathy or want of foresight of their predecessors.

During the present year many excursionists have visited Peterborough. No one who witnessed their aimless and unsuccessful wanderings in pursuit of some quiet, shady spot, but must have felt a park would have proved to these tired and dusty travellers an immense boon, a great attraction. They would have left the town delighted with their outing, and another year we might have expected greater numbers to follow in their train.

This sort of advertisement of a place we all know is most beneficial. Besides a park is required for our own immediate wants. Our mechanics, clerks and labourers would rejoice if they had, in close proximity of the town, such a resting place, where after arduous toil and confinement, they might breathe the fresh air of heaven, and enjoy well-earned repose.

The time has surely come when the purchase of a park should be made. We do not write in the interests of any party, but we believe suitable grounds could be secured now without great outlay. Very soon it may be too late. Besides the planting and beautifying of such grounds will require time to effect it properly. Shall the initial step be taken?

If each of the matters we have referred to as conducive to Peterborough's prosperity, were fully carried out, we venture to say, the present year would be recorded as one of the brightest and best in the annals of our history.

Editorial Notes.

Polling in the Lennox local election takes place to-day.

The Mail, though bitterly opposed to the demonstration in honour of Hon. Mr. Mowat, has not yet decided to send down a Winnipeg battery of artillery to put a stop to it.

Britain is a far heavier trading country than the United States is, but nevertheless her commercial failures under free trade are only one-third of those of the United States under protection.

Mr. J. D. Edgar was elected for West Ontario by acclamation. The Tories found the loyalty of the Reformers of the riding proof against their attempts to stir up division and make a split.

The presidential campaign in the United States is developing a fresh twist. Ben. Butler is declared to be simply a running mate for Blaine, his object being to split the Cleveland vote. However, the latter's prospects are said to be bright.

According to the return of criminal convictions issued by the Dominion Government, the N. P. isn't improving our morals. In 1881 there was one out of every 107 of the population of the Dominion charged with a criminal offence; in 1882 there was one for every 101 of the population.

The Tory journals seem to think it a terrible thing for Reform papers to expose the fraudulent nature of the N. P.; they also seem to think it a virtue to depreciate and run down the newly acquired territory of Ontario, which is, thanks to the efforts of Hon. Mr. Mowat, no longer in dispute.

If Sir John could have staved off the settlement of the Boundary question till the arrival of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, he might have secured a "scientific frontier." The science of political humbug would be a novel addition to the repertoire, so to speak, of the Association.

The Toronto World accuses the Mail of publishing "special cablegrams" manufactured on this side of the Atlantic. Whether or not this be so, a shilling a word is a high price to pay for a "special" telling how a "nigger" minstrel troupe failed to fill the house, or other equally absorbing and valuable intelligence.

War has been begun between France and China, and the Celestials have come out very much second best in the opening engagement—a sea fight—the whole of the Chinese squadron having been captured. There is hardly a possibility of England becoming involved, yet the feeling of the French towards England is decidedly hostile. The former accuses the latter of being the sole cause of the rupture with China.

The American navy is so bad that it can't be preserved even in brine. The other day a war ship was run down by a coasting schooner and sunk, and every day or two a war vessel runs into a raft or scow and is crushed. The ships sink even in the very harbours. A protective policy has driven Yankee merchant ships from the high seas, and it is doing its work of sinking the war navy as speedily as possible.

A Tory contemporary objects to the forcing of Mr. J. D. Edgar on West Ontario. The Tories are trying to force Geo. T. Blackstock, a Toronto lawyer, on Lennox, with, we are happy to state, scant prospects of success. There's nothing wrong in that, even though the malodorous Boultbee engineers the business, and the Tory Warden of the county takes a trip to Ottawa for his health and returns prepared to "see" Mr. Blackstock's "bar'l o' money" and go one better, from the Ottawa bribery fund.

The British Association for the Advancement of Science held its first session in Montreal yesterday. The Association embraces the cream of the scientific savans of Great Britain, and their selecting Canada as the place of meeting, is a great and practical compliment to the progress and importance of the Dominion. Canada has, herself, some scientific men whom she need not fear to place along side the greatest of the old world. The gathering in Montreal will be one of immense scientific moment, and one event will probably be that an International Society, with a scope and aim similar to the British Association, will be formed. After the conclusion of the sessions in Montreal the Association will pay visits to other Canadian cities.

In answer to the objection that the present high taxation imposed by the Dominion Government is not in the public interest, the Tories can assert that it yields abundance of funds for promoting party interests. Even offices are created to give an excuse for spending the taxes and rewarding political favorites. A Halifax merchant, and a good Tory worker, failed in business in spite of the N. P., and he was rewarded by having the office of "Inspector of Imported Sugar" created, with a handsome salary attached—for his sole benefit—for the office is entirely unnecessary. If the public experience a rise in sugar they may know that the extra price goes to pay for the pap of a political hanger-on of the Government. Another man is appointed as distributor of the fishery bounty, another bogus office; and Mr. Rufus Stephenson is inspector of homesteads within the limits of the colonization societies territories, an office no more necessary than the fifth wheel to a wagon. Bleed the people by taxation, but don't forget to reward political supporters with the salaries attached to useless and unnecessary offices.

The cholera scourge is on the increase in France. Those Frenchmen who are fighting in China don't seem to be in much more danger of death than those who remain behind in the dirty and unclean cities of southern France. Italy is also visited with the scourge, and there is danger of its reaching this country. The intimate and frequent commercial intercourse between all parts of the world, exempts no country from the danger of infection. On Saturday last a steamer from Liverpool for Baltimore, U.S., landed a stowaway at Waterford, Ireland, and he died in a few days of what was pronounced Asiatic cholera, and at latest advices a high reward would induce nobody to undertake the burial of the body. A similar chance may land the cholera in our midst almost any time. It is well to take every precaution of cleanliness and sanitation. Let whisky, the cucumber et hoc genus omne, of food and drink be avoided. The local Board of Health is not pursuing any too vigorous measures to combat the evil if it comes. If the cholera should alight us, the sanitary precautions we have taken will be conducive to a more robust state of the public health.

Our New Watchmaker, Mr. Hughan, comes well recommended, and we are sure any work entrusted to him will be done in good style. Office lately occupied by Elias Burnham, Simcoe Steet. 18-tf

Springless Truss and Supporters

PROF. C. W. HOTCHKIN

Will visit the following places again:—

LINDSAY—Benson House, Sept. 26th and 27th and 28th.

PETERBOROUGH.—Caisse House, Sept. 29th and 30th.

Prof. Hotchkin's treatment is practical, rational and economical. Its object is immediate relief and eventual cure. It is based on scientific principles and easily demonstrated to the comprehension of every intelligent person, that a truss without steel springs or hard substance, having healed Inguinal and Umbilical as well as Variocoele, at the advanced ages respectively of from 65 and 75 years, must and will stand the test against all Spring Trusses to children as well as adults. Prof. H. having had 20 years' experience has become master of his profession, and DEFIES the Hernia he cannot hold in its place. Prof. H. has invented an apparatus to hold the PILES in their proper place which has been successful as his other inventions. Go and see for yourselves.

Prof. Hotchkin's post office address is Albion, Orleans Co., N. Y. 32-1d
